PRICED OUT OF BUYING NEW HOME

Average cost of a property in Kent is now £218,462 – a massive 10 times more than the average county wage

By STEVE KNIGHT

FIRST-time buyers are still struggling to get a foothold on Kent's property ladder, with house prices more than 10 times the county's average wage.

According to a new report by the National Housing Federation, the average cost of a home in the county is now £218,462 despite three years passing since the economic downturn hit the UK.

Sevenoaks has been named the least affordable town in Kent – and seventh in the whole of the South East – with the average price of £359,921 being almost 15 times the average county income.

However, even the most affordable district of Medway still has an average house price of £157,449, which is seven times the average income.

Warren Finney, regional manager for the federation, said: "Housing need across the South East is reaching desperate levels and Kent is no exception.

"With the Government bringing in sweeping changes, the axing of regional spatial strategies and the challenges of the current economic climate, the emphasis is increasingly being placed on local authorities to ensure housing needs in their areas are being properly assessed and met.

"We are calling on central government to continue to invest in affordable housing and are urging local authorities throughout Kent to keep it high on their agenda.

"It's vital they continue to work with their local housing associations to ensure the supply of affordable homes doesn't dry up."

In addition to Sevenoaks, the neighbouring districts of Tunbridge Wells and Tonbridge and Malling also have average house prices more than 10 times the average income, as do Canterbury, Ashford and Thanet.

Kent County Council's cabinet member for regeneration and economic development, Cllr Kevin Lynes, admitted the lack of affordable housing was a cause for concern.

He said: "The onus is on our local district schizophrenia and bipolar disorder. In deprived areas such as Thanet and Dover, mental health issues are more prevalent.

A strategy called Live it Well has been developed by Kent County Council, Medway Council and the three primary care trusts, which cover west Kent, eastern and coastal and Medway – the first local plan of its kind.

It looks to promote the mental wellbeing of everyone and ensure those with mental health problems get the care they need.

The plan also aims to develop non-medical alternatives to drug interventions, improve the passage from child and adolescent mental health services to adult facilities, and to develop liaison psychiatry teams in all acute hospitals in Kent and Medway. Ms Kavanagh said: "The strategy starts from the premise that there is no health without mental health and emphasises the crucial importance of promotion in helping people to stay well in mind.

"NHS Medway, NHS Eastern and Coastal Kent and NHS West Kent, along with Kent County Council and Medway Council, are working together to raise awareness of the five ways to wellbeing – actions that people can take to enhance their wellbeing and reduce their risk of anxiety and depression."

These include contact with others, keeping active, appreciating positive things, education, and helping other people.

Cllr Graham Gibbens, KCC cabinet member for Kent adult social services, said good mental health is at the heart of life and community.

"The principles and services behind Live it Well are important and valuable and I am delighted that health and social care services are coming together to provide support that can make a real difference to people's lives," he said.

Live it Well makes 10 commitments, including reducing the number of people with common mental health problems, ensuring people have easy access to care in a crisis, and reducing the number of suicides.

The launch of the strategy coincides with World Mental Health Day on Sunday.

Council officials face the axe in money-saving bid

By MARIJKE COX

A POTENTIAL cull of senior management at County Hall is to be discussed by councillors tomorrow.

Big wigs' roles could be examined for their "fitness for purpose" under a proposed shake-up of the top-level structure of Kent County Council.

A report by KCC leader Cllr Paul Carter and group managing director Katherine Kerswell outlined the need to transform senior levels of management.

Councillors will be asked to support Ms Kerswell's recommendation to start a formal consultation process with staff who could be affected by any changes.

In the Change to keep Succeeding report, she states: "We need to examine the most senior posts that we have in this organisation.

"We must ensure that they, along with all the other roles and services, are fit for purpose and that the overhead costs they represent are appropriate."

The move aims to help cut the authority's budget, which needs to be reduced by £340 million over the next four years.

The report will be looked at in conjunction with the council's draft medium-term plan, Bold Steps for Kent, outlining details of the proposed changes at senior level, including:

• A review of salary levels.
• The introduction of a voluntary redundancy process.
• The removal of contractual bonuses.
• A new organisational structure and competency framework.

Discussions will come just a week before chancellor George Osborne announces the comprehensive spending review.

In the KCC report, Cllr Carter and Ms Kerswell praised the "talents and energies" of the council's most senior managers, but admitted the benefits were not without significant cost to the taxpayer.

Cost-effective

"In lowering costs and raising productivity, all layers of management need to be examined to assure cost-effectiveness," they said.

On Monday cabinet members will be asked to agree to a review of salary levels of senior staff, carried out by management consulting firm Hay Group.

The review will look at the level of responsibility and accountability of each role and recommend an appropriate level of salary.

Proposals also include removing current contractual bonuses and bringing senior performance pay in line with the Total Contribution Pay scheme already in place for other KCC staff.

An in-depth supporting document to the report was not available to KOS Media, with a KCC spokesman saying the content was restricted. But in Change to keep Succeeding Ms Kerswell and Cllr Carter said the planned changes would make the authority "fitter for purpose".

"It is crucial that the council's senior management arrangements are reviewed to assure members that value for money is secured and that these managers can together drive though the essential changes required across the county," they wrote.

"In usual times, top-level organisational changes can help drive change through organisations. In times of tightening fiscal constraint they are essential to drive even deeper change throughout services and organisations."

The report also focused on the need for senior management to carry out changes that are needed over the coming period.

"In order to deliver sustainable levels of budget savings we will require organisational courage and resilience from members and officers alike.

"Senior managers need to possess competencies and capabilities to take the whole organisation forward and they need to possess the collective confidence to take the next bold steps."

BBC brings to life story from 'Father of Science Fiction'

Pictures: BBC

By CHRIS MURPHY

NOTORIOUS ladies' man and well-known science fiction author HG Wells is being celebrated with two major BBC TV shows.

Wells spent much of his life in Sandgate, near Folkestone, having been born in Bromley in 1866, and made his early money from playing cricket before eventually becoming known as the 'Father of Science Fiction'.

Now a new TV film version of his First Men in the Moon will be shown on BBC Four.

The story has been adapted for TV by League of Gentlemen star Mark Gatiss.

It is followed by a drama based on Wells' life, which stars Michael Sheen as the writer. The actor specialises in portraying real-life people and has previously starred as Tony Blair, David Frost and Brian Clough.

Wells wrote and published First Men in the Moon in 1901 during his early days in Sandgate. It is set in a cottage near the Military Canal by Lympne Ridge, Hythe.

It was a follow-up to his science fiction work The Time Machine written in 1895, which inspired the Doctor Who series.

Its two characters are Bedford and Cavor; the latter invents a form of anti-gravity paint which he then coats on a sphere. This takes them to the Moon where they find it already occupied by a race of insectoids.

The previous film adaptation was in 1964.

SPACEMEN: Mark Gatiss (right) as adapted HG Wells' (top) First Men in the Moon for TV

Ray Duff, from the Folkestone-based HG Wells Festival Committee, said: "There was also a 1919 silent film of First Men which is now considered lost, but the British Film Institute recently included it on a search list in case someone still has a copy somewhere."

Wells was also well known for his sexual conquests as well as his incredibly writings in Sandgate, which also included War of the Worlds and The Invisible Man.

A festival is held every year in Folkestone to celebrate the author, who, despite being married, fathered children by other women in the town. In the end he had to flee Sandgate for London to escape the scandal.

The new 90-minute film First Men in the Moon will be shown on Tuesday, October 19, on BBC Four. Rory Kinnear stars as Julius Bedford and Mark Gatiss as the Edwardian scientist Professor Cavor.

It is followed by the 90-minute drama profile called HG Wells: War with the World.

Fact or 'fission'?

DUNGENESS could be ruled out as a site for a new nuclear power station by the Government, according to an accidental online leak.

A report by Nuclear Engineering magazine said a Department of Energy and Climate Change website still in development inadvertently published the details. The website said Dungeness, along with the Kirksanton and Braystones sites in Cumbria, had "been found to be not suitable for the deployment of a new nuclear power station by 2025".

Ruled out by Labour, hopes had been revived after new energy secretary Chris Huhne said that areas which already had existing power stations and where there was popular local support would be considered for a new plant.

Carter's no vote

COUNTY Hall leader Paul Carter has ruled out a reform of the electoral voting system in Kent.

Speaking at a full council meeting on Thursday, Cllr Carter said he thought the Alternative Vote system – due to be the subject of a referendum for national elections – will only lead to more hung Parliaments and coalition governments in the future.

Education chiefs vow to improve poor marks in primary classrooms

EDUCATION chiefs have vowed to tackle problems with pupils' development in primary schools after the Government published official figures exposing Kent as below average, writes Marijke Cox.

The issue has blighted the county's primary school leagues tables for the past five years, and independent research is planned to get to the root cause of the problem, said Kent County Council cabinet member for children, families and education Cllr Sarah Hohler.

Kent's children perform significantly better than the national average at GCSE level, but year on year primary pupils fail to do so in the core subjects of English, reading, writing and maths.

Department of Education figures, based on this year's SATs, showed the number of children who progressed to the expected level four between key stage one and key stage two – seven to 11-years-old – was below the national average.

In Medway, the results also fell short.

The national average for pupils achieving level four in English and maths was 74 per cent; Kent scored 70 per cent and Medway 67 per cent. In writing, nationally the figure was 71 per cent, but Kent and Medway both got 67 per cent.

Cllr Hohler said: "This is a situation we are all working relentlessly to improve. I'm sure I speak on behalf of all headteachers and those who work in our school improvement team, when I say we will not be satisfied until Kent exceeds the national benchmark and continues to improve.

"I cannot stress enough the priority we are placing on this. We don't just accept this – we want to address it head on."

Systems are in place to regularly assess headteachers and pupil progress and any child who is not on track to reach level four at key stage two is given learning support.

Intensive support is also given to struggling primary schools, and a shake up at County Hall will established Heads of School improvement, who will help and challenge schools.

Gravesend-based education expert Peter Read said it was puzzling as to why primary school children were not progressing when secondary pupils were beating targets every year.

He said: "There is no obvious reason for it. Teachers in these primary schools are under so much pressure to deliver and they are assessed by Ofsted to make sure they are.

"They can't seem to meet the targets, but it's not through want of trying."

Schools minister Nick Gibb said despite the hard work of teachers, one in six key stage two children nationally fail to make the expected progress in English and maths.

Care homes overhaul comes under attack

By STEVE KNIGHT
steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

RELATIVES of elderly residents whose care homes may be closed have voiced their anger to councillors behind the proposals.

Kent County Council plans to rebuild three homes and close a further four as part of a major overhaul of its adult social care service, but the scheme has met with fierce opposition.

A total of more than 7,400 people signed three petitions against the proposals for three of the homes, which were presented at a full council meeting on Thursday.

It marked the first time members of the public were invited to speak about their petitions at such a meeting.

"Having met some of the families affected by these plans, I can only be impressed by their determination to save the home," said Penny Cole, whose mother-in-law suffers from dementia and is a resident at Manorbrooke in Dartford.

"The residents at Manorbrooke are treated with respect, consideration and compassion and do not want to lose their home. These people's lives are in the council's hands. The upheaval this scheme could cause to someone in their 90s cannot be underestimated."

Manorbrooke is one of three care homes at risk of being demolished and replaced with 'extra care' social housing that would allow residents to live independently but with carers available 24 hours a day.

UPSET: The county council's care home overhaul plans have angered thousands

The others are Bowles Lodge in Hawkhurst and Cornfields in Dover.

Sampson Court in Deal is one of the four earmarked for closure, but lead petitioner Carol Hubble said it was fit for purpose and did not need to be shut.

She told councillors: "Elderly people with dementia cannot fight these proposals so it falls on their relations to stand up for their civil rights. How will such a valuable service be implemented by the private sector? I can't see a private company wanting to keep beds empty in case of an emergency. KCC has put forward no positive solutions and the problem is growing. If it isn't broke, why fix it?"

The other care homes earmarked for closure are Ladesfield in Whitstable, The Limes in Dartford and Lawrence House, Folkestone.

The shake-up also affects Wayfarers in Sandwich, which will be sold as a going concern, and three Swale care homes – Kiln Court in Faversham, Doubleday Lodge in Sittingbourne and Blackburn Lodge in Sheerness – that the council will effectively sell to the private sector and negotiate an agreement where it can retain rights to places.

KCC says the changes will save the authority £2 million a year, but insists it is also about providing better care and more choice.

Cabinet member for adult social services Cllr Graham Gibbens assured petitioners their views would be taken on board and the consultation period will run until November 1.

He added: "This is not primarily about money. What we are talking about is the way older people in Kent are cared for, both now and in the future.

"I understand how difficult this is for many people. I personally am encouraged by the massive interest shown by residents, carers and the media across Kent. It's been very helpful in developing our strategy for now and in the future."

Fresh appeal by road rage killer

ROAD-rage killer Kenneth Noye has been granted a fresh appeal against his murder conviction. Noye, from West Kingsdown, stabbed 21-year-old Stephen Cameron during a fight on a slip-road on the M25 near Swanley in 1996.

Kenneth Noye

The 63-year-old, who was previously cleared of murdering a police officer in the 1980s, argued he acted in self-defence but was later found guilty of murder. But the Criminal Cases Review Commission has referred the conviction to the Court of Appeal, saying "there is a real possibility the court may quash the conviction as unsafe".

It said there was questions over the original pathology evidence.

YEAR 11 pupils at a Thanet school are being given incentives of £150 for good attendance and a minimum of five exam passes.

The Marlowe Academy, in Ramsgate, is also rewarding younger children with points on a loyalty card for good behaviour, which they can then spend on goods such as mobile phones and cinema tickets from a catalogue.

The incentive is being paid for by the school's charitable trust fund and the Vivo Miles scheme, a national reward system available to schools across the country.

Year 11 students must achieve 93 per cent attendance and pass five GCSE exams including English and maths to gain the rewards.

MP gathers support against bogus charity clothes scam

THE fight against bogus charity collectors instigated by a Kent MP has won support from the Government.

Chatham and Aylesford Tory representative Tracey Crouch secured a Parliamentary debate on the matter after a recent BBC investigation which revealed Lithuanian conmen claiming to work for Breakthrough Breast Cancer had been delivering charity clothes sacks to homes in Kent.

The donated articles were then being sold on for a profit abroad.

The discussion was held on Wednesday, when Miss Crouch was invited to join a new group consisting of members dedicated to tackling the problem.

Charities minister Nick Hurd said: "The more I look at the matter, the less easy it is to see a quick solution. The nature of the activity is in the shade and at the margin of the law.

TRACEY CROUCH

"The challenge will be for the people to think afresh, review what we are doing and consider whether we could take cleverer, more co-ordinated and more robust actions to get on top of the problem.

"There is clearly a significant risk the problem will undermine the confidence of the public in giving to charity, at exactly the time when we want them to give more."

According to Miss Crouch, an estimated 36,000 tonnes of clothes are stolen every year at a cost to charities of up to £14 million in donations.

However, she said enforcement action against bogus charity collectors was poor and that only one in every 10,000 acts of illegal collection was punished.

Mr Hurd said he would write to both the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Ministry of Justice to ask them to review guidance for officers and levels of punishment.

Miss Crouch said: "It is very welcome that the minister takes this issue seriously and that he wants to ensure the proper detection and punishment of this organised criminal activity in future. I am pleased to have been asked to join the round table and look forward to making sure this growing problem of bogus charity collectors is dealt with properly so those who donate clothes to charity via doorstep collection can do so with confidence.

"Bogus collection has grown from a small-time deception to a nationwide organised crime, costing charities millions in lost revenue. Unless the issue is taken seriously right from the top, the scam will continue."

THE INTERVIEW

BY JANE CONNOLLY

Inspiring young chefs to success

ASPIRING young chefs will be tempting taste buds as they compete in the Kent Young Chef Award 2010.

Organised by Produced in Kent, the competition gives secondary school students the chance to flex their culinary muscles.

By designing a main course recipe for two people, created from local and seasonal produce, two lucky winners will earn the chance to cook at a very special event.

Julie Monkman, manager of Produced in Kent, explained that the competition targeted secondary school children in order to capture their imaginations and prompt an early interest in cooking.

"We had a great response last year, with 184 entries from 47 schools," she said. "We felt it was fantastic for a first year and this year we needed to find a way to make it bigger and better. Because of the success of the first event, we've got more sponsors on board, which is really good.

"It has meant we are able to do a bit more in terms of prizes and our ability to promote the contest through more channels."

A winner will be chosen from each age group – years seven to eight and years nine to 11 – and the two victors will have the chance to help design the menu for a charity dinner, to be held in January in aid of Kent Air Ambulance.

They will also cook on the night, alongside Claire Wood, head chef at Woods Restaurant in Tunbridge Wells, one of the award's sponsors.

ON FILM: Young chefs prepare their dishes in last year's competition

"We think it's a fantastic idea and a great prize for the two winners to get involved to that extent. It's an example of how we've developed the competition," Ms Monkman said.

"We decided to add a little incentive, because what we really need to make it successful is for teachers to get on board. We found that last year, when teachers got involved, we got really great entries and teachers came along to the final cook-off.

"The school that submits the most entries will get two tickets for the charity dinner."

Although public interest in healthy eating and the provenance of food seems to have increased in recent years, Produced in Kent is still keen to promote the message that buying locally and seasonally is best.

"It goes back to our ethos, which is about encouraging people to eat local but seasonal as well," she said.

"Supermarkets have created a situation where people can get hold of whatever they want at any time of year, even strawberries in winter. That's OK, but what do they taste like?

"If people demand that, supermarkets will say they are meeting that demand, but we say, 'let's go back to eating locally and seasonally'."

Entries for the Kent Young Chef Award must be received before Friday, October 29. Entry forms, recipe criteria and rules can be found online at www.producedinkent.co.uk.

'Strictly' show goes on for brave Ann

FORMER Maidstone MP Ann Widdecombe has vowed to continue her stint on BBC's Strictly Come Dancing despite the death of her brother this week.

Ms Widdecombe said she will "dance for her brother", clergyman Malcolm Widdecombe, who was 72. Mr Widdecombe is said to have enjoyed watching his sister on the show as the 63-year-old made it through to the second round after her salsa routine last Saturday.

A NEW £6 million centre for children and teenagers with severe mental health problems will open early next year.

Winthrop Hall in Staplehurst is being transformed to provide intensive inpatient support for youngsters aged 12-18 from across the county.

NHS Eastern and Coastal Kent, NHS West Kent and NHS Medway, commissioned South London and Maudsley NHS Foundation Trust to provide the facility plus a new 24-hour specialist community-based service.

The makeover of the former drug rehab unit will create Kent's first specialist children's mental health centre. Support for those with psychiatric disorders, depression, self-harm, post-traumatic stress disorder and mental health problems resulting from physical, emotional and sexual abuse will be on hand 24 hours a day.

Officers rewarded

TWO officers from Kent Police's public protection unit have received awards from the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Det Insp Matthew Long was recognised for his work developing the Kent internet risk assessment tool which helps identify offenders who pose the greatest danger to children, and assists in rescuing those being abused.

And Det Sgt Wendy Sherwood received her award in recognition of her contribution to the review of national guidance on managing sexual offenders and violent offenders.

Generation of lost talent warning over tuition fees

REMOVING the cap on university tuition fees could "create a generation of wasted talent" and push out students from middle-class families, writes Marijke Cox.

Representatives at some of the county's universities said they were shocked at Lord Browne's report, which proposed radical reform of the system, and said the right to education needed to be protected.

Plans include abolishing the £3,290 a year cap on tuition fees, which could lead to top universities charging up to £20,000 a year.

Despite recommendations by Lord Browne that a levy be paid by those who charge more than £6,000, Lauren Crowley, vice-president (Education) of Kent Union, the student voice for the University of Kent, said this will not stop some putting up fees.

"Oxford and Cambridge and Russell Group universities will put their fees up to the top end of the scale," she said.

"The University of Kent will have to make changes to keep up its reputation."

Miss Crowley said there would be a massive impact on higher education, with many students potentially being deterred from even considering going to university.

"If changes come in students will be leaving university with at least £35,000 debt in top institutions," she said. "At the moment the average is £20,000-25,000. The middle classes are the ones who would be hit. Poorer families are quite well looked after, but students from middle-class backgrounds are £5,000 more in debt."

She said Kent students would be joining the National Union of Students (NUS) and the University and College Union (UCU) for a national Fund Our Future demonstration on Weednesday, November 10.

The NUS called the report "foolish, risky, lazy, complacent and dangerous".

Other recommendations are for the interest rate on loans, which is currently 1.5 per cent, to rise to inflation plus 2.2 per cent; that all students are eligible for flat-rate living-cost loans of £3,750; and unpaid students debts are written off after 30 years instead of 25. Another proposal is that students would not start repaying their debt until their earnings reached £21,000, instead of the current £15,000.

Confidence

If Government accepts the recommendations they could be introduced from 2012.

Professor Jan Druker, senior pro-vice-chancellor of Canterbury Christ Church University, said it would be hard to avoid increasing fees if the spending review removes most of the teaching fund, as expected.

"We appreciate a rise from £3,290 a year to around £6,000 is likely to hit families very hard, especially those on low or middle incomes, which many of our students come from," she said. "We have worked hard with communities to encourage students who may not have traditionally had the opportunity or confidence to continue onto higher education and study at university to realise their dreams. We are under no illusion that the rise in fees may be a deterrent to those students, especially if they feel they are going to incur that level of debt."

Prof Elaine Thomas, vice-chancellor of the University of the Creative Arts, which has campuses in Canterbury, Maidstone and Rochester, said UCA has mixed views.

"On the one hand we acknowledge that, in the current economic climate, a review of higher education funding is necessary and raising tuition fees represents the best way forward," she said.

"However, we must make certain that the increased cost to students and families does not stop talented people from going to university. Mechanisms must be put in place to enable students to study at the institution of their choice, otherwise I fear we could create a generation of wasted talent."

Vice-chancellor of the University of Kent, Prof Dame Julia Goodfellow, said increased graduate contribution is inevitable.

"The prices have to be seen in the light of expected massive cuts in the teaching grant to universities which currently subsidise each student."

Julian Brazier, the MP for Canterbury, called for standards to be maintained in research and teaching and for poorer people to still be given the chance to go to university.

Ambulance move

HEALTH Secretary Andrew Lansley has given his backing for South East Coast Ambulance Service (SECAmb) to become a foundation trust.

Should the plans be approved by the foundation trust regulator Monitor, the service will become accountable to Kent patients, local people and staff rather than to the Department of Health as it is at present.

Monitor will be visiting SECAmb over the next few months as part of the final assessment, with the possibility of foundation trust status being awarded by spring next year.

Jeep death dive

POLICE divers have been searching a pond close to where a burned out car linked to the murder of a farmer in a burglary was found.

The body of Julian Gardner, 53, was found by his business partner at Bush Barn Farm in Robertsbridge, East Sussex, on Monday.

He is believed to have interrupted thieves trying to steal off-road vehicles left at a repair centre in the grounds of his farm.

A Landrover Defender belonging to the farmer was found abandoned and burned out near the farm at Cripps Corner and a Cherokee Jeep, which had also been set on fire, was found at Sandhurst in Kent.

Police divers were searching a pond near to where the Jeep was found on Thursday for any evidence which may have been in the vehicle.

CAMILLA, Duchess of Cornwall, will pay a royal visit to Kent later this month.

The wife of the Prince of Wales will meet doctors, patients and other invited guests at Kent and Canterbury Hospital on Thursday, October 28.

She will be given the chance to see the hospital's osteoporosis service at work in her role as president of the National Osteoporosis Society.

The Duchess will arrive at about 1.50pm.

Minister says successes send clear message to criminals

'Immigration control not a soft touch in Britain'

By MARIJKE COX
marijke.cox@kosmedia.co.uk

ORGANISED crime networks are the target of a new enforcement drive aimed at protecting Kent's borders and cracking down on immigration offences.

The move follows an intense nationwide operation over the summer where UK Border Agency officers teamed up with the Serious Organised Crime Agency and police to fight immigration crime.

More than 400 operations were carried out across the UK, with some 800 arrests made and £500,000 cash seized.

Immigration minister Damian Green told KoS the joint work by the agencies will now run throughout the year in a bid to warn international criminals they will be caught if they operate in Britain.

"In Dover a Czech national attempted to smuggle six Vietnamese people in hi-fi speaker boxes in the back of a Mercedes van," he said. "[His capture] will send a message to other Czech criminals and to people trying to come over here that they will get caught."

Mr Green, Tory MP for Ashford, said in the past 10-15 years problems with immigration and associated crime have got much worse.

ILLEGAL ACTIVITY: Immigrants have tried to sneak across the Channel inside lorries

"As you get more people travelling across borders there is going to be more crime," he said. "One of the purposes of the summer operation was to send a signal that Britain is not a soft touch with immigration control."

During the summer enforcement – code-named Operation Golding – teams targeted and disrupted organised criminals involved in human and drug trafficking, and arms smuggling, arresting and prosecuting them and stripping them of their cash and assets.

Enforcement officers were also stationed at a number of registry offices to stop illegal weddings in the fight against marriage abuse.

Mr Green said the operation did not cost more money, but spread resources and abilities.

Mr Green said strike action by border agency staff which took place this week at Dover port and the Channel Tunnel had not affected the enforcement work.

Public and Commercial Services Union members at the port are embroiled in a dispute about changes to rosters, roles and the downgrading of highly-sensitive immigration control work.

Mr Green said: "This is a different type of work so it doesn't affect the enforcement operation. But the strikes have caused a moderate impact causing delays to passengers."

Possible changes within the UK Border Agency are not the only thing the Home Office has come under fire for this year.

Home Secretary Theresa May announced the coalition would limit the number of foreign workers to 24,100 – down by five per cent – between now and April, 2011, when the policy is fully introduced.

This has been criticised by business leaders who say a rigid visa cap could harm the economy by pushing out oversees companies.

And health chiefs believe talented foreign doctors or scientists will be excluded.

Mr Green said the objective was not to deny talented workers access to the UK, but to cut the number of immigrants.

He added: "At the time of recession we had 300,000 university graduates needing to find work. There are bright and talented people here and in the EU who need jobs."

Holland Damp Proofing dries out your home and is guaranteed to work

DAMP is a creeping menace that affects thousands of homes across Kent.

It rots woodwork and carpets, peels wallpaper and causes fungus and mould growth on walls.

During autumn as the temperature cools, the tell-tale signs of damp will become more noticeable in your home. Treating your property for damp now is the best way to make sure that your home is prepared and protected in time for winter. As dry walls are better insulators, a damp free home will help to reduce costly winter heating bills.

It is important to tackle the problem because ignoring damp can store up serious problems and also pose potential health risks – especially if you have a medical condition such as asthma or rheumatism.

By KATIE HOLDEN

For years, people have tried to solve damp problems, applying waterproof coatings or injecting walls with chemical solutions.

This can involve contractors coming into your home and drilling into brickwork to pump chemicals into the walls – hacking off and replacing plaster inside.

The work can be messy, intrusive and your home will need redecorating once it's been done.

And, despite all this upheaval, there's no guarantee that it will work in the long term. Chemical barriers tend to break down over time, and once this happens – that damp will be back.

Holland Damp Proofing is a breath of fresh air that can permanently rid your home of the scourge of damp.

EXPERT OPINION: Evert de Graaf with one of the damp-regulating bricks that have already been installed in thousands of UK homes.

The idea is simple: draw out the moisture and the damp will disappear! The Holland Damp Proof System® involves a series of small damp-regulating bricks which neatly fit into specially prepared niches in the external walls of your home, close to the ground.

These cleverly allow air to flow into the brick chambers and out again – circulating airflow through the inside of the wall which evaporates the moisture, drying out the wall and allowing it to breathe.

No chemicals, no mess and no replastering – your property dries out... and stays dry for good.

Holland's no-chemicals system is mess-free and as the work is completed from the outside there is no need to replaster.

It can be used on most types of wall (including stone) and combines perfectly with cavity wall insulation.

It takes just one to two days to install and all the work is carried out by our own professionally trained team of installers.

And we are so confident that it works – we'll give you a 20 year guarantee, so you can have total peace of mind.

Tribunals overturn 'petty' parking fines

HUNDREDS of parking fines issued by "ticket-happy" town halls for petty infringements are being overturned by independent adjudicators, writes Marijke Cox.

Figures released by the Traffic Penalty Tribunal Adjudication Service showed in some areas of Kent and Medway up to 91 per cent of drivers contesting penalty charge notices were successful in 2008-09.

Some breaches involved failing to show a pay-and-display ticket correctly, or parking slightly over white lines on bays

The tribunal looks at cases where drivers have received a ticket and contested it with the council and lost. Motorists are then able to appeal to the tribunal, where independent lawyers consider the evidence and decide whether it should be upheld.

Areas with the highest number of tickets overturned in 2008-09 included Medway, where 91 per cent of cases – 328 of the 360 cases – were dropped.

In Maidstone, 114 of 126 cases – 90 per cent – saw motorists win their appeals, and in Gravesham, 66 per cent – 56 out of 85 – were successful.

Draconian

In Sevenoaks, although only 20 cases were referred to the independent adjudicators, 19 were overturned and the drivers walked away without a fine.

Ian Taylor, Kent spokesman for the Association of British Drivers, said although parking should not be a free-for-all, some draconian councils were taking the issue too far.

"A lot of these things are trivial and as far as the figures go I would say some councils are being ticket-happy and this shows with the number being overturned," he said.

"We accept people can't just park where they like, but there are times when the enforcement is unnecessary."

A Medway Council spokesman argued that the parking measures supported the authority's pledge to reduce congestion and make the roads safer to use.

"Civil enforcement officers undertake a difficult job enforcing parking restrictions and try to be consistent and fair," he said.

"The majority of parking restrictions have been asked for by Medway residents, schools or traders, who are concerned about illegal and inconsiderate parking and associated safety issues."

OUTSMARTED: Medway camera car

Figures for Medway showed that in 231 of the 360 cases the council failed to contest the appeal once it went to the tribunal.

The spokesman said: "Medway Council takes any mitigating circumstances provided by the motorist into serious consideration, which has had an impact on the number of tickets not contested. We have also been much more lenient as we were the first authority to use CCTV enforcement outside of London, and understood that residents would need time to adjust to this."

The spokesman said Medway pays for an independent adjudication service and is happy to abide by and respect its decision.

"Anyone who feels they have been given a penalty charge notice incorrectly should contact the council in the first instance," he said.

"If the appeal is rejected, a further appeal can be made to the Traffic Penalty Tribunal Adjudication Service, which is independent. Its decision is final and binding for both parties."

A Sevenoaks council spokesman defended the 95 per cent of cases overturned.

"Out of 9,305 penalty charge notices issued, only 20 were referred to the tribunal by motorists, 0.2 per cent of the total, which indicates the majority of notices issued were done so correctly," he said.

"Of the 20 cases, we won one, lost two and did not contest the remainder due to resource limitations at the time."

For Gravesham, which saw 66 per cent of tickets scrapped, a spokesman said many cases were not contested due to evidence supplied on the appeal which had not been available previously to the council.

Scour the Stour

HIGH concentrations of phosphates are threatening wildlife in the River Stour, according to a new study.

With just five per cent of rivers in England and Wales described as pristine, the Environment Agency is planning to improve our waterways.

One of its main targets is the Stour and its estuary near Sandwich, which has excessive levels of phosphates, caused by run-off from farmland.

Water purification often fails to remove phosphates, which can spread over large distances in water, promoting the growth of algae and duckweed.

These use up oxygen and block sunlight, making the river uninhabitable for other organisms.

MP's Iraq doubt

JULIAN Brazier MP has said he may have been wrong to vote for the war in Iraq, and the planning for its aftermath was poor.

The Canterbury MP was speaking to the East Kent Justice for Palestinians group when he made the comments.

He said: "We have managed to handle the Middle East situation very badly. I voted for the war in Iraq. It was probably a mistake."

Mr Brazier, a former TA officer, also said poor planning and inadequate resourcing of the aftermath of the Afghanistan invasion resulted in many British military and Afghan civilian deaths.

He said: "We have to be willing to stand up to the threat we face. In Afghanistan there was never any question, we had to go in. We had a failed state that was a platform for Al-Qaeda. But we handled it badly.

"I believe that was a combined military and political mistake."

MD Paul is on the Inca Trail

THE Peruvian adventure is well under way for Archant KOS Media boss Paul Stannard as he begins his trek to one of Unesco's World Heritage Sites.

The 46-year-old, who will be spending nine days in demanding conditions among some of the most dangerous animals in the world, flew to Peru on Saturday with his group of intrepid explorers.

Mr Stannard, managing director of the publisher of this newspaper, will trek the Inca trail to Machu Picchu, the Lost City of the Incas, before being dropped in the Amazon jungle to live alongside the wildlife for four days.

The trip is in aid of Dave Lee's Happy Holidays, a charity sending sick and deprived children on holiday, and the Demelza House children's hospice near Sittingbourne.

Mr Stannard funded the trip himself so every penny raised will go to the charities.

Ahead of his trek, he said: "Whatever challenges I face can't be compared to what those kids are going through. I've seen what Dave Lee and Demelza do. It's the least I can do to give something back."

To make a donation to Dave Lee's Happy Holidays go to www.justgiving.com/Paul-Stannard and for Demelza House go to www.justgiving.com/Paul-Stannard0.

Ghouls, ghosts and Hythe's moth-man

AS A self-proclaimed monster hunter scouring the county for wild big cats, it's not surprising Neil Arnold has taken on something sinister for his latest project.

And as with his wild cat research, the 35-year-old's new work is just as likely to come under the scrutiny of sceptics unwilling to believe there is anything mystical out there.

But Mr Arnold, who is an author and full-time researcher on large, exotic big cats in the wild, said his new book Paranormal Kent is different from the 'friend of a friend' tales usually associated with mythical stories.

"There are so many books where the stories are just regurgitated so someone can make a quick buck," he said.

"Everyone's heard the ghost stories of Kent, but after 30 years or so they become a bit stagnant. I wanted to look into the history of some of these places like Blue Bell Hill, with its phantom hitchhiker, but also write about things people hadn't heard off."

Haunted

Mr Arnold, from Rochester, said his book throws light on classic ghostly tales, uncovering sinister secrets of some of the most haunted areas of Kent, while revealing new, never-before-heard stories.

"Blue Bell Hill is, I believe, the most haunted place in Britain," he said.

"For years there were reports of people picking up a girl in their car and she would then disappear from the back seat. There were also reports of people knocking a girl down and she would then disappear.

"In 1965 there was a crash on Blue Bell Hill. There were four women in the car and three died – one of whom was a bride-to-be and people thought it was her.

"But the first report of seeing her goes back goes back to 1934.

"After doing some research I found out a girl was murdered in 1916 and I believe it was her people were seeing."

The ghost of an old hag has also been reported on Blue Bell Hill.

"All the reports – there are about 20-30 – seem genuine. People had genuine shocked reactions when recalling stories."

Mr Arnold said people in Pluckley, which is believed to be Britain's most haunted village, still don't know all the eerie tales of the area.

"I've shed new light on the mysteries of this village," he said.

"Whether a believer or not, there is so much history that there is definitely something mystical going on.

"For centuries Kent has been the centre of high strangeness, from monsters in the woods, weird objects in the skies, serpents in the water and ghosts on the road."

Mr Arnold, who started Kent Big Cat Research and gives talks on a daily basis to groups around the South East on large cats said to live in the countryside, said his book also includes tales of eerie creatures ranging from the winged 'moth-man' in Hythe in the 1960s, to serpents and dragons.

• Paranormal Kent, £9.99, is Mr Arnold's fourth book after Mystery Animals of the British Isles: Kent; Haunted Rochester; and Haunted Maidstone. For a copy go to www.amazon.co.uk/Paranormal-Kent-Neil-Arnold/dp/0752455907.

East-west divide proves a pain for chronic sufferers

By STEVE KNIGHT
steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

PATIENTS suffering from chronic pain conditions have been warned they face discrimination depending on what side of the county they live.

While those in the east of Kent have access to a range of services close to their homes, those in the west are often required to travel miles to receive the help they need.

The matter was discussed at last week's meeting of Kent County Council's health overview and scrutiny committee, when it was revealed that some NHS West Kent patients have to access services as far away as the UCL hospital in central London.

Neither Maidstone Hospital nor Darent Valley Hospital has any facilities for dealing with chronic pain, whereas all three of NHS Eastern and Coastal Kent's main hospitals provide some sort of service in addition to several other smaller clinics.

Lib Dem councillor Dan Daley (Maidstone Central) told the meeting: "The difference between the delivery in the east and west shows up more of a discrimination for the population because the numbers of pain opportunities in east Kent are many, whereas in west Kent they are few.

"There's nothing for people in Maidstone yet we've had promise after promise and I'm disappointed to see it's still under discussion."

Sufferers of chronic pain in Maidstone currently have the option of attending clinics at Sevenoaks Hospital or Pembury Hospital in Tunbridge Wells, but Cllr Daley said both were still too far for people in agony to travel to.

Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS Trust is undertaking a detailed audit to determine the potential level of demand for a more local pain management programme.

Cllr Daley added: "I've recently had need to become involved in pain management and have had to make frequent trips to Guy's Hospital (in south-east London), and I don't think that's a very good idea.

"If NHS West Kent can't do better than this, and much more quickly than this, then I think it's very sad."

According to the Chief Medical Officer's report of 2008, repeated surveys show chronic pain – including severe headaches, back problems and arthritis – is two or three times more common now than it was 40 years ago.

Nationally there are 7.8 million people living with chronic pain, with three in 10 Kent residents having experienced it in the last year.

Dr Jon Norman, a consultant anaesthetist and pain medicine specialist at Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS Trust, revealed there will be no room for a chronic pain clinic at Maidstone until July next year at the earliest.

He added that while there was a lack of facilities in some parts of the west of the county, patients still have access to a good service and waiting times have been reduced dramatically.

He told Cllr Daley: "The situation is not ideal but it's better than it was and is better than large swathes of the country.

"We want to continue moving in the right direction but there are no guarantees about funding. It's easy to sit there and tell me something needs to be done, but someone needs to give us the investment."

Former tennis star opens court

TV PRESENTER Andrew Castle took on a Kings Hill coach in a charity tennis match.

The former British tennis number one visited the opening of the latest Hillreed development at Oast Court Farm near East Malling, to christen the new tennis court.

The Wimbledon commentator represented his country in two Olympic Games, an Australian Open and the Davis Cup before trading his racquet for a mike and embarking on a career presenting and commentating, recently finishing a 10-year stint on ITV's GMTV breakfast show. And now he has picked up his racquet once again.

Castle said: "I gave up tennis for 10 years when I retired from professional playing; I'd played full time from when I was nine so I needed a break, but I'm enjoying playing again."

His opponent was Matt Ferrell, a pro tennis coach from the David Lloyd tennis academy in Kings Hill who has taught in the area for more than 12 years.

A FOUL incident has left a bad smell on the streets of Minster and been caught on CCTV.

A woman has been captured defecating on the village streets, while her male friend stood by and held her coat.

The editor of the Minster Matters monthly village newsletter informed readers of the incident in the October issue of the publication.

Ray Owen said: "All we can say is (and if you're reading this, you'll know exactly who you are, Madam), that you obviously have no pride in your surroundings or in Minster as a whole, as it's just disgusting, what you've done.

"Your companion is no better, having stood and held your coat whilst you relieved yourself. The pair of you should be truly ashamed."

Firm is given £20,000 fine after worker suffered terrible burns

A CONSTRUCTION and engineering company has been fined £20,000 after an employee suffered severe burns when his jackhammer touched underground electricity cables.

Bradley Marsh, 28, from Ashford, suffered 62 per cent burns to his upper body, face, neck and arms when he struck the 11,000-volt cable while working at a construction site in Tovil, Maidstone.

An investigation by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) found Mr Marsh's employer, Dwyer Engineering Services Ltd, was in breach of a number of safety regulations after the incident at Burial Ground Lane, in June, 2009.

Maidstone Magistrates Court heard the firm did not have a capable supervisor on site, which contributed to poor practices being commonplace.

There was also no suitable system in place for the identification of underground cables.

Additionally, Mr Marsh was not trained to dig within 500mm of the live cables, a factor which led to the incident.

Dwyer Engineering Services Ltd, of Shottenden Manor Farm in Ashford, earlier pleaded guilty to breaching the Construction (Design and Management) Regulations.

This week the company was fined £20,000 and was also ordered to pay costs of £14,532.

Mr Marsh was hospitalised for six weeks, and as a result of his injuries cannot expose himself to direct sunlight, due to skin grafts.

His house has been adapted so he can sleep downstairs and he is unlikely to work again.

Father of stabbed actor makes film about knife crime

By MARIJKE COX

THE father of murdered Harry Potter actor Robert Knox has screened a gritty film about knife crime to prisoners to show the damaging effects of violence.

The 16-minute movie, Cold Kiss, starring actor Ray Winstone, was shown to inmates at Elmley prison on the Isle of Sheppey by Colin Knox, whose son was stabbed to death outside the Metro Bar in Sidcup in 2008.

The 57-year-old, from Greenhithe in Dartford, said the response from the prisoners was overwhelming.

"I felt very emotional, every one of them shook my hand after the screening and apologised for Robert's death," he said.

"They were very accepting of what I was trying to do in raising awareness about knife crime and we had quite a long two-way discussion about it."

Mr Knox, who was last month commended alongside his ex-wife Sally by Kent Police for their campaign against knife crime, said one inmate, who was jailed for murder using a knife, spoke to him after the screening

"He was very remorseful," said Mr Knox.

"He wasn't feeling sorry for himself – he wanted to know how he was perceived outside the prison. I told him no-one thinks about him, people only think about the victims. I was just telling it how it is."

Cold Kiss was funded by Mr Knox, who helped produce and direct the film, and Winstone, who played the lead role, provided funds for post-production.

TALENTED: Actor Robert Knox (right) with his brother Jamie and mother Sally

The 53-year-old actor waived his fee to feature in the film and got involved because he feared there had been a rise in violent crime.

Robert, who was just 18 when he was murdered by Karol Bishop, 22, a "habitual knife carrier" who will spend at least the next 20 years in prison, starred in the 2004 film King Arthur with Winstone.

The young actor had just finished filming for Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince when he was stabbed while trying to protect his younger brother Jamie, who also features in Cold Kiss.

Cold Kiss, some of which was filmed at Elmley prison, tells the story of a teenage girl whose boyfriend is murdered and she becomes obsessed with the power of a knife.

Mr Knox said: "The message is very strong We had a premiere in Ashford and Sir Ben Kingsley came along with Ray Winstone. He said 'great film, no answers' which is true, there are no answers in the film."

Cold Kiss is included as an extra in the DVD of Shank, a controversial thriller about gangs in a futuristic London.

Professor wants 7/7 survivors' insight to help improve safety

AS THE inquest into the July 7 bombing deaths finally started this week, a professor is hoping to talk to people who were evacuated from trains, stations and buildings during the attacks in London.

Professor Ed Galea, from the University of Greenwich, which has a campus in Medway, uses his insights from talking to disaster survivors to improve building designs and evacuation procedures around the world.

His work with thousands of survivors, including people who escaped from the World Trade Centre on 9/11, plane crashes and the Paddington rail disaster, is already being used by architects, engineers and emergency services internationally.

Postal strike helps driver become the first to beat camera rap

KENT'S road safety camera partnership has lashed out at criticisms that it doesn't understand the law after a speeding case was dropped when an apparent legal loophole was exploited by lawyers, writes Chris Murphy.

A Maidstone man claims to be the first in Kent to beat a speed camera rap thanks to a postal strike which meant he didn't receive notifcation he was to be prosecuted.

Benjamin Childs won his case against Kent and Medway Safety Camera Partnership, and his lawyer said safety officials need to learn the law better. It was a blast that has prompted a fierce response.

The camera partnership alleged Mr Childs had been caught by a mobile camera along Willington Street, Maidstone, doing 39mph in a 30mph limit on October 18, 2009.

They sent a letter to his mother, who was the registered keeper of the car, dated October 20, but was posted at the earliest on October 21, they said.

Mr Childs' legal team at My Brief Solicitors in Chatham, said the usual rule is to send a notice of intended prosecution to the registered keeper within 14 days of the offence being committed.

My Brief lawyer Jeremy Betts is upset after the partnership said it had never lost a case.

He said: "It seems they had forgotten about Mr Childs. The case has now been dropped in the last couple of weeks."

He said the notice to Mr Childs was sent just before a national postal strike.

Killed

The legal team argued it would not have been received within the statutory 14 days and the partnership should have taken other steps to deliver, such as by hand or by courier.

However, the partnership argues it only has to post the notification within 14 days to comply with the law.

My Brief wrote to the partnership, but camera chiefs and the Crown Prosecution Service still took the issue it to court.

Mr Betts said: "The case was in court twice before Mr Childs was acquitted. This means it has resulted in thousands of pounds in wasted costs with the partnership having to pay Mr Childs' solicitors' costs as well as the time spent wasting court time.

"This highlights the partnership's inability to understand the law. It expects motorists to comply with certain time limits yet the partnership seems to take the view that the same time limits do not apply to them."

A partnership spokesman told KoS: "We have to post the Notice of Intended Prosecution to the registered keeper of the vehicle within 14 days of the offence.

"The registered keeper does not actually have to receive it within the 14 days so we are unsure as to why this decision was reached and are currently in discussions with the Crown Prosecution Service.

"The stretch of road in question is Willington Street in Maidstone and the safety camera is there because four people have been killed or seriously injured.

"Mr Betts states the partnership 'seems to take the view that the same time limits do not apply to them'.

"We would like to take this opportunity to remind his client that the same speed limits apply to him as they do other motorists."

KCC supports Medway bid for city status

KENT County Council has backed Medway's bid to win city status in 2012, in part of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee year.

KCC leader Cllr Paul Carter said: "Medway's status will be enhanced as a place to visit, live and do business with.

"It will also set it apart from many other authorities, by making it even more of a 'place' rather than just a series of towns."

The council said a recent survey showed 68 per cent of people in Medway actively support the area's bid to be awarded city status.

Only six per cent said they are against it.

READERS of kentnews.co.uk have offered their support to Chancellor George Osborne's plans take child benefit away from parents on higher salaries.

Despite much controversy surrounding the proposal, when faced with the question "Do you agree with coalition plans to cut the numbers receiving child benefit?" 76 per cent of the 402 people who took part in the poll answered yes.

Climate Camp experiences make film-maker 'just do it'

ACTION: Los Angeles-born Emily James

A FILM director searched 20 times during the infamous Kingsnorth Climate Camp demonstrations admits the experience almost put her off making her latest documentary.

Los Angeles-born Emily James, 38, won compensation from Kent Police after the force admitted its abuse of stop-and-search powers throughout the week-long protests of summer 2008.

But the acclaimed former Channel 4 film-maker admits the negative memories of the rally faded over time, allowing her to create her latest documentary entitled Just Do It – Get Off Your Arse And Change The World!

"It's a miracle I wasn't dissuaded by Kingsnorth because the policing was pretty

By STEVE KNIGHT
steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

extreme," she said. "I had been commissioned to make a three-minute film on the protests so I had quite a lot of expensive equipment with me and had to come and go every day.

Obligation

"I think I was stopped and searched about 20 times in five days, and we even had our vehicle impounded because the police said it wasn't insured for professional use even though we weren't getting paid.

"The policing made everything in that camp really difficult and that appeared to be the tactic. Even the food that was brought in was delayed for hours every day and for no apparent reason."

The Kingsnorth Climate Camp protests were against plans for a new coal-fired power station at the site on the Hoo Peninsular; plans which have since been put on hold by energy firm E.ON.

Just Do It tells the tale of several real-life activists who took part in a number of high-profile demonstrations, including April's infamous G20 Climate Camp and the Plane Stupid takeover of London City Airport.

James was given unprecedented access to the direct action groups and decided to go independent because she feared "selling out" the stars of the show by giving more creative control to the BBC or Channel 4.

An executive producer on last year's critically-acclaimed Age of Stupid film, Emily told KoS she felt she had a "moral obligation" to make documentaries about climate change.

"I'm not an activist," she said. "I just work on films that I'm passionate about and care about.

"I've certainly found myself being sympathetic with what a lot these people have to say, and working on this film has made me think about certain issues in a much deeper way.

"I've come to realise that if you believe something is wrong then you have a moral obligation to help stop it. I feel like I'm playing my part by giving the activists a voice and getting their message out there."

Just Do It is currently in post-production and set for release in spring next year.

James said she hopes the film – funded entirely by donations – inspires more people to stand up for what they believe in.

She said: "I want people to understand that when people come together they become more powerful and can achieve more.

"We're not saying everyone should break into airports or chain themselves to railings; what we're saying is that you might feel better about yourself if you do."

Teacher asked pupil: 'Want to make babies?'

A DISGRACED teacher who asked one of his teenage pupils if they wanted "to make babies" has been suspended from teaching for a minimum of two years.

Frank de Groot, formerly of Rainham Mark Grammar school, received a prohibition order in a hearing at the General Teaching Council (GTC).

Mr de Groot, who taught at the school for six months, faced four allegations of unacceptable professional conduct relating to incidents that occurred in 2007.

In January of that year, he was alleged to have made an inappropriate comment to an unnamed year 10 pupil that included the words, "do you want to make babies?".

The hearing also heard how he threw a board marker at another year 10 student.

Following this, he was alleged to have used inappropriate language to his year 11 students that included profanities.

The former teacher was also accused of disclosing private information from a meeting with the headmaster that contained confidentialities relating to a pupil.

Mr de Groot, who did not attend the hearing, had previously admitted to the latter three charges during the school's internal investigation. He denied making the inappropriate comment.

This was rejected by the GTC however, who described evidence against him as being "consistent and credible".

SUZANNE LLOYD: Design for life

Auction to help fund treatment bid by painter

A PUBLISHING firm is offering to design and set up a business website to help raise money for an artist who has been refused a potentially life-saving cancer treatment.

Canterbury-based Deeson Group said it was prompted to act on behalf of Suzanne Lloyd because the NHS was reluctant to fund so-called SIRT treatment.

She recently told KoS of her nightmare at being refused vital medicine to help treat the breast cancer that has spread to her liver.

The 43-year-old, from Deal, said three consultants believe a radical new treatment called SIRT could help keep her alive, but health chiefs turned her down.

SIRT – selective internal radiation therapy – involves tiny radioactive beads being injected into the artery which feeds the cancer, allowing it to grow and spread.

Priority

The combined cost of one treatment is £23,000, but Eastern and Coastal Kent Primary Care Trust has refused to fund it.

The trust's medical director Dr Robert Stewart said: "Our priority is to pay for medicines and treatments that are proven to work and are safe."

Now Deesons has donated the website to be auctioned to help Suzanne. The website, suitable for a small business or an individual, will be professionally designed and built to the winner's requirements, up to a value of £750.

It can have features including news listing, a blog and contact form. Other items to be auctioned include artworks painted by Suzanne, a week for up to eight people in a Cornish thatched cottage, and a week for two in a cottage in France.

The winners will be decided by highest sealed bid and will be notified after the auction on December 3. To join in the fundraising, visit www.suzanne-lloyd-fund.org.

Brave Eleanor is face and voice of cancer campaign

A WOMAN told two-and-a-half years ago that secondary breast cancer could kill her within five years has spoken of the nightmare of living with the incurable condition, writes Chris Murphy.

Eleanor Meade, 52, was told in February, 2008, breast cancer had spread to her bones and become secondary. Despite medical advances, it can't be cured.

Now she is the face and voice of Breast Cancer Care's new campaign to highlight the disease. Eleanor, from Folkestone, will be appearing in magazine and newspaper adverts across the country. Until recently she ran her own foster agency.

The mum-of-three has been supporting Wednesday's Secondary Breast Cancer Awareness Day, the first dedicated day highlighting the condition in the UK.

Eleanor found out two-and-a-half years ago she had secondary breast cancer in her ribs and a lymph node.

She said: "You adjust to life with it. I always expect I am going to improve. I have a very strong faith – I am a born-again Christian and not ashamed of it.

"I genuinely believe that what happens to me, and what will happen to me, has a purpose.

"My job is to live it out and to try to make sure the world is a better place for me having been in it. I know that sounds clichéd, but that's what I'd like."

That's why she volunteered to be part of the ad campaign.

She said: "When I see myself in print I feel sad because I realise what is happening to me is real."

Jane Hatfield, director of policy and research at Breast Cancer Care, said: "It is a scandal that we don't know how many people are living with secondary breast cancer in the UK.

"Without this knowledge, we can't plan accurately to ensure the right support is available."

To support Eleanor, visit www.breastcancercare.org.uk/secondary-breast-cancer or ring 0808 800 6000.

REMEMBERED: Lori Oschefski's during her trip to Woodlands Cemetery

Campaigner's journey to graves of those lost in forgotten 1929 tragedy

A CANADIAN woman who started a campaign for a permanent memorial to a forgotten tragedy has made a pilgrimage to the site of 15 deaths.

By CHRIS MURPHY

While researching her family tree Lori Oschefski, from Ontario, realised she was related to one of the victims of a 1929 fire in Gillingham Park which left six adults and nine children dead. They mainly suffocated when a public display by local firemen went wrong.

The firemen were supposed to rescue the volunteers from a purpose-built 40ft 'house' which was set alight in a controlled fire.

But the flames took hold of the wood and canvas, and the display turned into a real-life disaster killing those inside, made up of firemen playing a part of wedding guests along with youngsters from naval scout groups.

Lori demanded the ageing graves be restored and a permanent memorial placed in the park.

She travelled to Medway last week to see for herself the progress made since KoS highlighted her campaign.

She said: "I am extremely happy with the work done on the graves.

"They have never looked better and I just hope all this good work continues. Now we need the memorial at the park and the campaign will have succeeded."

The dental hygienist was researching her family history and discovered her mother's cousin, 12-year-old Eric Cheesman, died in the flames.

Thousands looked on at the funeral procession, as the bodies were taken to their last resting place at the nearby Woodlands Cemetery.

An inquest returned misadventure verdicts.

Lori said: "They have started to renovate the graves and they look brilliant. Now I hope that work will continue, it looks like it is in progress.

"But what they have done so far is absolutely wonderful. I am wondering what happened to some loose masonry, and they are going to get back to me on that.

"They are pieces of the gravestones that had broken off. If they are not going to be replaced, I am sure some of the families would like the opportunity to have these.

"On Eric's grave, there was a small stone at the foot of it with the words 'Eric Cheesman' on it. If the intention is that this stone is not going to go back on the grave I would like to have that.

"The council also told me they are working towards having a memorial place in the park. If this happened, myself and the rest of the families will be delighted."

She intends to pursue Medway Council until her wishes are met.

Ex-Tory councillor awaits sentence for drink driving

A FORMER leading Tory on Thanet council has admitted two charges of drink driving.

Ewen Cameron appeared in court in Margate on Thursday, October 7, to face three charges of driving under the influence of alcohol.

One charge was dropped due to a lack of evidence, but Cameron admitted the other two. He will be sentenced on November 1.

The first charge he admitted was being found to be over the limit while driving on Friday, August 20.

Cameron, 52, of Canterbury Road, Westgate-on-Sea, was arrested again last week.

On October 6, police stopped him at traffic lights in Westgate just before 10am.

Cameron was the Tory representative for Bradstowe ward and 'lead member' for customer services, although he resigned the party whip following the first two drink driving charges.

He now represents Bradstowe ward as an independent member of the council.

Gallery shows the art of war

FANS of Henry Moore should make their way to Canterbury for a major show of his works, plus a host of others.

The exhibition has been 90 years in the making is at the Sidney Cooper Gallery.

The drawings are part of a British Council exhibition called Fall Out: War and Conflict in the British Council Collection.

It has been a major hit in the capital and Canterbury was chosen to display it for the first time outside London.

The organisers say it is a unique opportunity to explore more than 90 years of artistic engagement with war and conflict.

Vice-Chancellor of Canterbury Christ Church University, Dr Robin Baker, said: "We are delighted to host this exhibition. The exhibition features works on the subject of war and conflict by influential artists of international renown.

"The subject of the exhibition remains, unfortunately, hugely topical in our society and world, and the works of art it contains require us to explore these realities in new ways."

The collection is open until, November 13.

Cancer insurance farce

Ruling means sufferers may miss out on payments

By STEVE KNIGHT
steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

VICTIMS of a deadly disease caused by exposure to asbestos are set to suffer even greater distress following a controversial ruling on compensation payments.

Last week three Court of Appeal judges were unable to agree on who should be liable for insurance claims filed by mesothelioma patients, meaning many face missing out on cash they say they are fully entitled to.

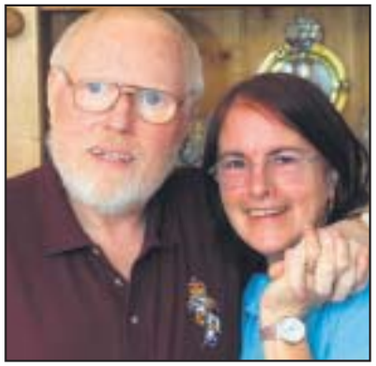
Kent is one of the UK's hot spots for the terminal cancer, with the Health and Safety Executive revealing last year that Medway in particular has one of the nation's highest concentrations of related deaths – with 265 between 1981 and 2005.

Many of those who contracted the disease would have worked as tradesmen at Chatham Dockyard prior to its closure in 1984, where asbestos was used widely in the ship-building industry.

The Court of Appeal ruling says that in some situations victims are entitled to compensation dating back to when they were first exposed to asbestos, while others can only claim from the onset of symptoms related to mesothelioma, depending on the wording of their insurance policies.

However, the disease can take up to 60 years to develop – creating a huge gap between the haves and have-nots.

"Without a uniform judgement it remains unclear which victims are entitled to access the justice they deserve," said Helen Ashton of Irwin Mitchell solicitors, which has a dedicated team representing patients in Kent and the rest of the South East.



NO CLAIM: Avril Gooding-Grant with partner and mesothelioma sufferer Les Alford

"It really is pot luck and has added another layer onto what is already a complex claim, meaning many victims of mesothelioma who have been awaiting the outcome of this appeal decision may not live long enough to know if their families will receive the compensation they need to provide financial security when they are gone."

Mesothelioma is a rare form of cancer that develops from the protective lining that covers many of the body's internal organs, including the lungs and heart.

The disease is partly to blame for NHS Medway having one of the worst survival rates of lung cancer in the UK, with a report last year revealing that just 23.2 per cent of patients are still alive a year after diagnosis.

Avril Gooding-Grant, 53, from Hoo, lost two partners to mesothelioma and is now virtually penniless after failing to win compensation following the death of the second.

"I've been told I'm not getting anything because the company he worked for has long since gone bust," she said.

"I can't work because I suffer from depression and now I've got the bailiffs at the door. I received some compensation when my first husband died [in 2001] but that's run out now and I've got nothing left.

"There are many people out there like me who rely on that money, and it's terrible that they will now not get it."

The compensation issue went to the Court of Appeal because insurance companies disputed a 2008 High Court judgement that said the industry was always liable at the time of exposure to asbestos rather than when the symptoms become evident.

A number of trade unions have spoken out about the latest ruling, which may now be passed on to the Supreme Court.

John McClean of trade union GMB said: "How can it be just that an insurer can avoid paying compensation for the actions of a negligent employer simply because exposure happened many years previously?

"This ruling is farcical, and the tragedy is that many of those suffering from mesothelioma will die before it is resolved."

"My husband and I separated last year. I was at a complete loss to know what to do. Whitehead Monckton were very caring and were able to help me arrange everything without us going to court. They also sorted out the mortgage and made sure I had a new will."

Graduate brings big screen art project to life across the nation

By STEVE KNIGHT

GIANT screens airing live footage of the 2012 Olympics will also become oversized canvases thanks to the ingenuity of a fine arts graduate.

Canterbury resident Mark Smith, 23, has been given permission by the BBC to create a huge digital gallery that will be viewed by shoppers in some of the UK's biggest cities, such as Edinburgh, Birmingham and Portsmouth.

As a result the screens, which are situated in 19 different 'Live Sites', including in Dover, could display paintings, sculptures, short films and other creations submitted to the former University for the Creative Arts student.

"I saw one of the new screens on a visit to Dover and was aware it could create a new platform for the arts," he said. "It is my passion to enrich the day-to-day experiences of the public through art. After formulating my idea I contacted various individuals within the BBC, and to my delight the idea was approved and supported.

"The idea that these screens could be networked hasn't been pushed before, and especially not by an outside source, so it's very exciting."

Currently the Live Site video screens air community information and Olympics news, as well as sporting events including the recent World Cup and Wimbledon.

The Dover screen was secured by Kent County Council's Olympics planning team working with the London Organising Committee of the Olympic Games.

Mr Smith, who is originally from Cambridge, is now busy creating a community of artists and creative professionals who will help make his dream a reality.

"In so many of our cities public space is taken up by commercial advertising," Mr Smith added.

"You're constantly bombarded with images trying to sell you something, but this project is about claiming back digital media sites and using them to create a network of enriching and stimulating works to show to the public 24 hours a day."

Husband shot wife nine times before turning gun on himself

A MAN killed his wife by shooting her nine times with a rifle – and then took his own life with an antique gun, an inquest has heard, writes Ed Hill.

Their daughter Clare found the bodies in a remote Brockham Farm in Brabourne Lees, last December.

Martin Jones, 65, and his wife Janete, 57, had moved from Singleton into the rental property just a few months before.

At the hearing it was revealed the couple's relationship had been going through difficulties. Mrs Jones had left her husband on previous occasions, but had returned. They had also been experiencing money problems and the bailiffs were due to visit the house.

But though detectives could not be 100 per cent sure, it appears that Mr Jones killed his wife, then composed and posted a letter to his daughter explaining his actions before returning home to kill himself.

In his evidence, pathologist Dr Peter Jerreat said Mrs Jones had died from haemorrhaging after multiple gun wounds fired from .22 calibre rifle, some at very close range. Mr Jones had died from a single gunshot wound to his forehead from an antique musket.

Neither had been drinking heavily although they both had traces of codeine in their bloodstream, probably taken for therapeutic reasons.

First on scene were their only daughter Clare and her husband Adrian Wood. They had been alerted that there may be a problem by Mrs Jones's sister Sheila Waters.

Problems

Mrs Waters, who lives in London, had been expecting her sister to return to her house in Eltham after dropping her at the farm to collect her car and clothes.

She said this time she felt her sister would be leaving her husband for good.

Clare Wood said when she arrived at the farmhouse her father was still breathing.

Dr Jerreat said although he may have been breathing when first found his injuries were "totally non-survivable".

Mrs Wood, from Smeeth, said her father had a lifelong interest in firearms and had been a keen clay pigeon and rifle shooter.

Her mother had not been happy after she had been involved in a serious road crash.

She said: "She seemed to have a mid-life crisis and did not know what she wanted."

On the day of the shooting she had spoken her father and he had told her he was expecting her mother and they would be trying to work through their problems.

She then got a call from Mrs Waters at about 6pm saying she was concerned.

Mrs Wood said: "I've gone over and over it in my mind. I think my mum had planned to leave him and he had lived with that. I don't think he had intentions of killing mum – something must have come out."

Mrs Waters said she had received a call from Mr Jones at about 5pm saying her sister had left.

She then spoke to him for about half an hour.

She said: "I feel sure she was already dead when he spoke to me. I wondered why he was bringing up all these things from the past. When I got no call from her I became worried."

Det Sgt Gary Scarfe from Kent Police had investigated the shooting. He said tapes were found at the farmhouse revealing Mr Jones had been recording his wife's telephone conversations without her knowing.

There was also evidence Mr Jones had at some point been locked out of the house and had broken his way back in.

The couple had been found in an upstairs bedroom together with Mr Jones' antique gun leaning against the wall. The officer told the court the next day a letter arrived at the daughter's house from Mr Jones explaining his actions, but it was impossible to know when it had been posted.

Coroner Rachel Redman recorded a verdict of unlawful killing of Janete Jones and suicide by Martin Jones.

'Brazen' conman who tricked £500,000 from elderly is sent to jail

A FRAUDSTER who conned a string of elderly people into handing over thousands of pounds has been jailed for nearly eight years, writes Marijke Cox.

Carl David Anscombe, of Amherst Gardens in Hastings, carried out a series of fraud offences described as "astonishingly brazen" by the judge at Maidstone Crown Court.

Anscombe pleaded guilty to six charges which included scamming a 60-year-old Dartford man out of £263,305, and taking £86,990 from an 84-year-old man living in Maidstone.

The 40-year-old con-artist also cheated a 91-year-old woman into handing over £1,720, as well as fraudulently supplying information and documentation to Cheltenham and Gloucester Bank to get a mortgage of £187,000.

In addition to the seven years and 10 months jail term, Anscombe was given a 15-year Financial Reporting Order, which means he must report all significant financial dealings and property purchases to the police, and he has been disqualified from being a company director for the next 15 years.

Det Con Mike Prior, from the Serious Economic Crime Unit for the Kent and Essex Serious Crime Directorate, called Anscombe's behaviour "vile".

"Anscombe, who has a long offending history against the vulnerable and elderly, deliberately targeted some of his victims with the knowledge they had previously been the victims of crime. Pure greed and an easy buck was Anscombe's motivation in carrying out these offences."

'VILE': Carl Anscombe

In April, 2009, police found that Anscombe has been using a false identity to target a 60-year-old man from Dartford and had defrauded him out of £268,305 using a complex scam.

Ansombe claimed to be acting for the Court Services to help the victim get back the money he had lost previously when he had been the victim of rogue builders B Smith and Sons, who defrauded 43 homeowners in Kent of more than £880,000.

Between January and April, 2009, the victim handed over large sums of cash to Anscombe and took out loans totalling £18,000 to pay him.

Anscombe was also accused of fraud offences totalling £86,990 for overcharging a victim for building and maintenance work.

He was also charged with acting in the promotion of a limited company and acting as company while disqualified as an undischarged bankrupt.

Cardiac unit's top award

A NEW cutting-edge 24-hour service to treat heart attack patients with primary angioplasty has won a top award.

The specialist unit at the William Harvey Hospital, Ashford, is the regional winner of the NHS Health and Social Care Awards.

Launched this year, the unit treats people suffering the most severe types of heart attack.

Angioplasty involves a small balloon being inserted via an artery in the groin or arm and guided to the blockage. Once in place, the balloon is inflated and removed, leaving behind a rigid 'stent' which allows blood to flow through.

A patient's test results can be sent straight from the ambulance to the specialist team at Ashford who can confirm the type of heart attack and where the patient needs to be treated.

Traffic flasher

A MAN was arrested in New Romney after he held up traffic in the middle of the road – while his trousers were round his ankles.

The 21-year-old was arrested by police early on Sunday, October 10, in Littlestone Road after he was seen shouting and screaming and holding up vehicles.

He was arrested and held in custody at Folkestone police station for almost eight hours until he was issued with a £80 fixed-penalty notice for disorder before being released.

None but the bravest

RARE items belonging to Victoria Cross recipients are being shown for the first time as part of a new exhibition celebrating history's war heroes, writes Marijke Cox.

Swords, pistols and letters belonging to the country's bravest will be displayed next to their 25 Victoria Cross medals at the Royal Engineers Museum, Gillingham.

The Valour exhibition is being opened on November 11 as part of the Remembrance Day commemorations.

Amy Adams, assistant curator at the museum, said she hoped unveiling never-before-seen artefacts would draw people in.

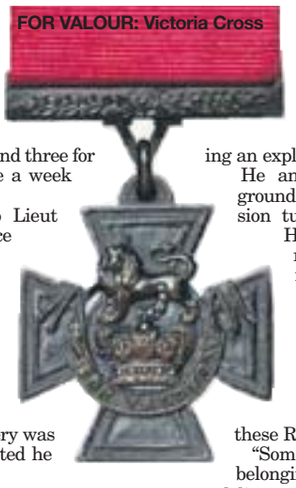
"We have 25 Victoria Crosses on display at the museum, but people often just walk straight past them," she said.

"For people who aren't medal enthusiasts we have brought out archives and artefacts belonging to the Victoria Cross recipients which have never been on show before.

"We hope it will draw in the crowds and bring the display to life."

Of the Victoria Crosses, three belong to Royal Engineers for actions in the Crimean War of the 19th century, and three for action in World War One a week before the Armistice.

A medal belonging to Lieut Digby Jones for his service during the Boer War – the first ever posthumous VC to be awarded – is on show alongside the museum's only World War Two VC, awarded posthumously to Sgt Thomas Durrant for action in the St Nazaire raid of 1942, whose bravery was so great his captors insisted he receive an award.



FOR VALOUR: Victoria Cross

Also included in the display is a postcard written by Sapper William Hackett along with his medal. Sapper Hackett was awarded posthumously on June 22, 1916, after being trapped underground in a tunnel following an explosion of an enemy mine.

He and four others survived underground for 20 hours until a rescue mission tunnelled through, where Sapper Hackett helped three of his comrades out. The fourth was so badly injured he was unable to get out, but Sapper Hackett refused to leave him.

The tunnel collapsed and despite extensive rescue attempts he was never found.

Miss Adams said: "It's important for people to see how brave these Royal Engineers were.

"Some of the archives and other bits belonging to the VC recipients are very delicate and in this case we have made copies.

"Most of them are originals though, and we hope this will bring in new people to the museum."

Also on display will be a selection of photographs which have never been shown to the public. A remembrance book will be put in the medals room for people to record their memories of members of their family who have served in the Armed Forces.

Friends and family of the VC recipients will attend on November 11, when the Regimental Colonel of the Corps of the Royal Engineers will open the exhibition.

Miss Adams said: "We want people to look at these medals and remember what these people did for their country."

Pub's tribute to fallen warriors claimed by the bloody Somme

EMOTIONAL tales from the trenches moved regulars of a village pub into creating a World War One memorial LP.

Performed by drinkers at the Lads Of The Village pub in Stone, near Dartford, the 10-track CD came about after a visit to the Somme in France and will be sold to raise money for the Royal British Legion and Help for Heroes.

The tour was organised by Phil Erswell and Peter Whapshott and was also attended by fellow pub regular Gerry Kelly and landlord Sean Holland.

Mr Erswell said: "We first visited the Somme 10 years ago and were quite touched by it all, so much so that we now take about three or four people over every year.

"There are so many individual stories. You can see where the soldiers fought, where they were buried and what a waste the war was.

"That's why it should never be forgotten.

"The trips are never 'jollies'. They're always very emotional and sobering experiences. Sean and Gerry were so moved by their visit that we all agreed to put this album together."

The Somme saw one of the largest battles of the Great War, between July 1 and November 18, 1916. It was one of the bloodiest military operations ever recorded, with 1.5 million casualties in total and 60,000 killed or wounded on the first day alone.

The memorial album, When the Whistle Blows, includes a mix of new songs alongside others which would have been familiar to the troops of the time, including Long Way to Tipperary, and Green Fields of France.

One of the more poignant tracks, James Crozier, is named after a soldier shot for cowardice after he fell ill and was found wandering away from the trenches without his rifle.

"The first time we went to the Somme it was a sunny day, but on the way back it poured down and we got soaked," said Mr Erswell.

"Back at our hotel we all had showers and enjoyed a beer. The soldiers didn't have that luxury and were stuck in those awful conditions day in and day out."

When The Whistle Blows – which also features guitarist Fred Hunt – will be officially launched at the Lads Of The Village pub on Friday, October 29.

Among those in attendance will be Steve Roberts of the Discovery Channel's popular Trench Detectives series.

"Six months ago I was in a car accident through no fault of my own. Not only did I lose time off from work but I also suffered terrible neck pain. Whitehead Monckton helped me get compensation at no cost and decide how best to invest the money."

Photographer's pride as he earns two accolades for stunning wildlife shots

COLD SNAP: Terry Whittaker's prize-winning picture of geese and ducks in the snow

Terry's double exposure

A WILDLIFE photographer has taken two major awards for his work, writes Chris Murphy.

It's the second time the British Wildlife Photography Awards have been held, and Terry Whittaker, from Folkestone, has taken prizes in the urban wildlife category, and another covering the 2020Vision project and commission.

For the urban prize, he took a shot of Canada geese and mallards, and in the Vision category, his winning picture was of a water vole reintroduction scheme at Wildwood animal park, near Canterbury.

Mr Whittaker said: "The shot of the geese was taken on a snowy day early this year at Reddish Vale Country Park, near Manchester.

"I used to live around there and my mother still does. The park used to be so polluted that nothing could survive, but they have done great things and it's teeming with wildlife after being cleaned up. It's still very urban though. I walked down there in the snow, waited for a passing train in the background and got the shot. I had to wait the longest time sitting on the edge of the frozen lake for the train, but it was worth it.

"I'm delighted to have done so well in these awards. It shows hard work can pay off."

Alan Law, Natural England regional director, said: "The amazing images which have been captured for this year's British Wildlife Photography Awards are a great showcase of the wildlife wonders in this country.

"In this, the International Year of Biodiversity, we should take stock of what a precious resource our natural environment provides and remind ourselves just how much it enriches our lives.

"Terry Whittaker is a worthy winner and particularly so for winning two of the awards."

Accompanying this year's British Wildlife Photography Awards, a book is being published called British Wildlife Photography Awards: Collection 1.

It showcases the 10 separate categories covering everything from marine wildlife and animal behaviour to creepy-crawlies and urban wildlife.

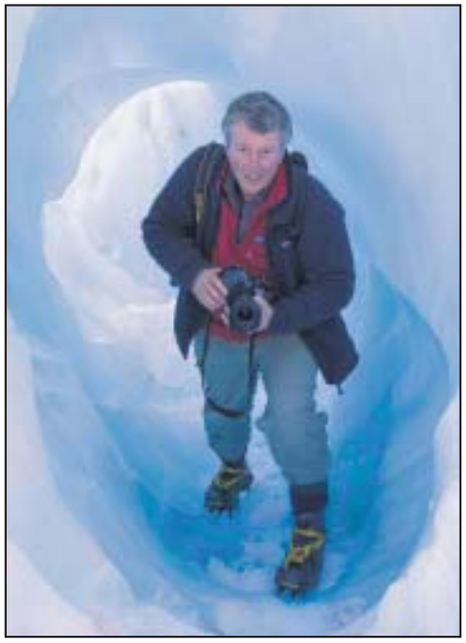
The book reveals an unseen splendour and surprising diversity of Britain's wildlife.

Plus there is going to be a year-long nationwide tour of the BWPA exhibition containing more than 90 images.

The awards were launched to celebrate the talents of both amateur and professional photographers and to highlight the diversity of British natural history.

Creator Maggie Gowan said: "With this level and breadth of commitment from supporters, it is hoped that the BWPA will set the standard for British wildlife photography for many years to come."

WELL TRAVELLED: Terry Whittaker on board a New Zealand lobster boat



ICE CAVE: Terry is no stranger to the natural world

LETTER OF THE WEEK

We don't need any more guilt

Can I praise Mrs Boyle of Rochester for her excellent riposte to C Russell of Ramsgate's condemnation of today's parents and her refusal to accept there are children who have needs that are nothing whatsoever to do with how old their parents were when they were born (Letters, last week).

The parents of those with problems such as dyslexia or autism, epilepsy or asthma, sight problems or hearing difficulties must have been incensed to read it was all their fault.

Can we assume this 'expert' from Ramsgate is a social worker, psychologist or educationist with vast experience of the children she meets in her area? Or, as Mrs Boyle wrote, a self-opinionated person with little understanding of what constitutes special needs, and no empathy?

Sorry, C Russell, you can't blame parents for everything when nature or illness or even genetic hiccups produces a child with a 'special need'. My son's heart condition is not caused by anything his mother did before he was born or in his childhood. It was just one of those things that can happen.

Please don't add to our guilt by accusing our family of causing this by not bringing him up properly.

Harry Tomkinson, Chatham

Migrant strain on our NHS

The cutting down on staff at Queen Mary's Hospital in Sidcup is not a new thing – it started almost five years ago.

They were cutting the hours of qualified nursing specialists and replacing them by general nurses.

Someone I knew had their hours cut by half, which forced that specialist to leave. Many staff warned this put children in a dangerous position in the paediatric diabetic unit. Many other hospitals still have this same problem.

An influx of immigrants not working or contributing to any of their benefits or the NHS is an overwhelming problem.

This added burden caused others who had paid into the NHS all their lives to wait for treatments. The government did nothing to stop this, but just allowed more people to enter the country. Even illegal immigrants were not deported, so we are still supporting them.

OPINION: DEATH OF THE UNI DREAM

Lord Browne's report is dangerous, complacent and heralds the end of publicly funded higher education argues LAUREN CROWLEY of the University of Kent

MY view on Lord Browne's report could not be clearer. It recommends a foolish and extremely risky approach to funding the higher education sector, with a rapid move to a nearly unconstrained market of universities in which students pay almost the whole cost of teaching.

It accepts at face value the lazy myth that competition on price between universities leads to higher quality and accepts the falsehood that fair access can be achieved through so-called 'needs-blind' admissions and a trade in bursaries.

It ignores the probability that at much higher fee levels, prospective students – especially from disadvantaged backgrounds – will change their behaviour and make judgements primarily on cost and debt. It fails to tackle the biggest questions in higher education, such as how we should re-shape what the sector does, and how it does it, to meet the needs of a very different economy.

Instead, it imagines these fundamental questions shouldn't be 'answered' at all, but left to the 'invisible hand of the market' to resolve. This is complacent and dangerous.

In the Commons it became clear Vince Cable sees the offerings of Lord Browne as a progressive graduate contribution. However, the student movement will not be fooled by such window dressing. What is proposed by Browne is a removal of the fee cap, the introduction of variable tuition fees and an indication that there will be an 80 per cent cut to the teaching of university courses, representing an end to publicly funded degrees in England. We must stand firm against the marketisation of the higher education system, and make clear that students (and their families) will not stand by when they are being forced to pay more to receive less.

If universities start to charge different prices, students will start to make decisions based on how much debt they can afford to get into rather than which course or university is right for them.

What planet is Lord Browne living on if he thinks student debt is going to double and students won't be deterred from going to university?

Students from a range of backgrounds, but certainly those from lower incomes, will be deterred at a time we want an economy with a workforce with the right skills for the future. We want people with the right skills and attributes to go to university, not deciding they can't afford it.

And there is a short-term issue with the high rate of graduate unemployment that is a real consequence of the downturn. But if you compare the UK with other international countries, we've slipped from third to 11th in terms of graduates leaving and being in the adult population.

If you look at the direction of our economy, we need more people with high-level skills. If people have the ability and aspiration to go to university, they certainly shouldn't be priced out.

There are elements of the report I welcome. We have been calling for an increase to the threshold for loan repayments, so the proposal to raise this to £21,000 is welcome – especially since it takes the lowest 20 per cent of graduates by earnings out of repaying their loan altogether. The NUS and students' unions up and down the country have long campaigned to bring part-time students into the system and the proposed extension of loans to part-time students could have an impact in widening access. But overall, the thrust of this report is wrong. It is desperately out of touch with the real world and apparently sees no problem with putting students and families under huge extra financial pressure in a time of austerity.

Ministers speak daily of having to make tough choices. The toughest choices of all are the ones yet to be made by thousands of families in a future under Browne's plans: can our children afford to go to university and can we afford to support them?

The Government must not ask people to make those kinds of choices – it must reject this report.

Wind of change in this financial storm

STORM clouds are gathering over Kent as a financial downpour of epic proportions threatens to rain down on public services.

This week started with Kent County Council unveiling plans for an overhaul of its management structure in an attempt to save £340 million over the next four years.

It continued with the National Housing Federation revealing the county is suffering from a lack of affordable housing, and with the South East England Development Agency predicting the loss of up to 18,000 public sector jobs over the next six years.

But the heavens will truly open on Wednesday when the Comprehensive Spending Review, which contains the full extent of the cuts for almost every Government department, is finally published.

For months, this is the document everybody has been braced for. From the Chief Constable Ian Learmonth to council refuse collectors, who – like most public sector workers – must be concerned about their jobs. These are difficult times and things are unlikely to get easier in the coming months and years.

Nobody can say they weren't warned about the bad news that is now just around the corner, but it still won't be any easier to take when finally revealed.

Wednesday is the start of a painful period in our history. Only time will tell what sort of a lasting effect it will have.

Like a moth to the monstrous flame

PROFESSIONAL monster-hunter Neil Arnold has written a book about the things that go bump in the night.

From the infamous ghost of Blue Bell Hill to the mysterious winged moth-man of Hythe, there are apparently all manner of spooky goings-on in the Garden of England. We have no idea how he sleeps at night. Mr Arnold, that is, not the winged moth-man.

Come to our Remembrance

May we remind everyone about the civic Remembrance Service which is to take place at 6pm on Sunday, November 14, at the Salvation Army, Union Crescent, Margate.

We would like to make this year's event particularly important for the people of Thanet and want to include as many of our services as possible, each represented by their own standards, colours or flags.

This year we plan to include a Drumhead Service with poppy petal drop within the ceremony to remember those who have died serving in the world wars as well as more recent and current conflicts, especially people from our area.

We would greatly value support and participation. If you belong to one of our services or organisations and wish to take part, contact me on 01843 594063; or Remembrance ceremony organiser Norman Jacob on 01303 894399. Thank you in anticipation for your support of the men and women serving our country and in Remembrance of those who lost their lives.

Join our team to beat cancer

If any readers have been lucky enough to secure a place in the 2011 London Marathon through the public ballot, World Cancer Research Fund would ask them to consider fund-raising for us.

It's easy to join Team WCRF and in return we offer full support with training and nutritional advice, an essential runner's kit containing your unique WCRF vest, a fund-raising pack and your own personalised online sponsorship page.

WCRF also offers a pasta party the day before the race and a post-race reception with free massage and shower to soothe away aches or pains.

Scientists estimate about a third of the most common cancers could be prevented by following a healthy diet, being physically active and maintaining a healthy weight.

So not only will taking part in the London Marathon help you get into the kind of habits that can reduce your own cancer risk, but the money raised will help us continue to fund our research and education programmes on cancer prevention.

If you are interested, visit www.wcrf-uk.org/fundraising or call 0207 343 4200.

Muppets are EU puppets

We have completed the usual round of post-election Muppet Shows – sorry, party conferences.

Now we can see what is possibly going to happen, especially regarding the deficit.

Promises were made that, in order to share the pain of cuts, 50 MP posts would be cut. I'm not holding my breath on that one.

We need their numbers drastically reduced. There are more MPs than can sit in the House at one time. Is there really any need for three MPs for Medway?

All MPs who submitted false expenses claims should be charged with fraud and fined the amount of their claim plus 15 per cent, then banned from Parliament for life. That would be a small payback to help the national debt. Failure to do so should be penalised by prison.

Our next action should be to leave the European Union. The amount we contribute to the EU is disgusting. Some estimate the total cost of the EU to be £65 billion. We never needed to join – we were already in the European Free Trade Association which was an opening for trade within Europe.

It has been demonstrated by recent moves by retired politicians that the EU is a gravy train.

It has not had its accounts cleared for 13 years in succession because of widespread fraud and poor record-keeping.

I wonder how any referendum on Europe would now fare?

It has been revealed that Lady Ashton was at a conference when she needed to be at a meeting about a proposal to stop the UK's £3 billion a year rebate. Her deputy stood in but was not allowed to speak.

The Prime Minister states there is no possibility of pulling out of the EU. Given our history with France and Spain since the time of Elizabeth I, Napoleon would be ecstatic that his claim that they would never rest until Britain was a part of France has succeeded.

The Lisbon Treaty allows increased EU powers without new treaties. What right has the EU to tell us what we can or cannot do?

A real eye-opener

Thursday saw the commemoration of World Sight Day, celebrating the wonderful gift of sight and to think of others who live with visual impairment.

I'd like to tell your readers how they can make a huge difference to the life of a visually impaired person – and have a fulfilling, affordable holiday into the bargain. I work for a charity called Vitalise. We organise group holidays to destinations all over the world. The difference is that our holidays are for people who are blind or partially sighted, as well as sighted people.

The sighted people make the holidays really come alive by describing the surroundings and providing help and companionship. They have a holiday with a real difference and come home with the satisfaction of having helped a fellow traveller have an unforgettable experience too.

What's more, the sighted holidaymakers get a discount on the price of their holiday, in return for the help they provide. Anyone can do it – all you need is a zest for life and the willingness to try something new. One recent sighted holidaymaker said: "Being able to share new experiences is really what these holidays are all about. It wasn't just the places, it was the people that made this such a great holiday. I would definitely recommend it. You just need to be prepared to get stuck in, enjoy meeting new people and, above all, be ready for a laugh."

So if any readers would like a holiday with real difference, call 0845 330 0149, email viholidays@vitalise.org.uk or visit www.vitalise.org.uk.

Puppy farm blight

The Dogs Trust is appealing for readers to send them their experiences when purchasing a puppy. The charity is particularly interested to hear from people who have bought from pet shops, superstores, classified adverts or websites. These outlets can be supplied by farms where puppies are bred in terrible conditions without any concern for their welfare.

As a result many of these puppies suffer health and behavioural problems. Dogs Trust's 17 rehoming centres across the UK and one in Dublin regularly have puppies handed in to them when owners can no longer cope with the cost and the upset.

Dogs Trust campaigns against the practice of battery farming of dogs and would very much like to hear your experiences. Email stopbatteryfarming@dogstrust.org.uk.

Crushed by debts

Kent Green Party is appalled by the Government's support for a massive unlimited increase in student tuition fees. The UK will become one of the most expensive places in the world to get a university-level education.

Kent and Medway, like other parts of the UK, will suffer from the effects of making university education more expensive.

The UK has already dropped from third in the world for producing graduates to 15th. Now, we are to become one of the most expensive places in the world for university education, despite serious skills shortages.

The aspirations of many young people are being crushed by the indifference of the coalition Government. If students do take on increased debts, this will cause a radical drop in savings in the UK; another decline in first-time home buyers because those crippled with debt will be unable to get mortgages; and limited access to start-up capital for those wanting to start businesses as the heavily indebted will be seen as a poor risk.

In addition, young people will increasingly go overseas for cheaper higher education, undermining our universities. It is disgraceful that the Lib Dems have reversed their position on this issue since before the General Election. As in other areas, they obtained votes on the basis of policies they are not willing to defend in office.

Vince Cable, ignoring both the need for fair taxation to support higher education and to address UK skills shortages, noted that only 45 per cent of our young people enter universities, but offered no solution to this scandalously low figure.

The future productivity and well-being of society, which should concern him as business secretary, are sidelined. Loss of university jobs in Kent and Medway is very likely in these circumstances.

Steve Dawe, Kent Green Party, Tonbridge

Give it a rest, Ann

A person called Ann Barnes, who says she is leader of Kent Police Authority, is almost constantly writing to your newspaper. Just who she and what is the Kent Police Authority?

Prior to her protestations I had heard of neither. Can anyone think of a better case for the open and democratic elections she seems to fear so much?

TG Clayton, Willesborough, Ashford

Say ta-ta to the TA

As the search continues for efficiencies, why does the Territorial Army have an establishment of 38,500 – albeit currently recruiting to 28,000?

Only 1,200 have deployed, alongside regulars, each year for the past decade, according to TAQ, the TA's own magazine. Thousands have not been deployed at all and 10 per cent have declared themselves unavailable for mobilisation.

Similarly, the regular Army claims it needs over 100,000 so it can deploy its contribution to the 9,500 service personnel in Afghanistan. This is plainly nonsense. The TA's role beyond 2015 must be questioned. What will these 28,000 TA soldiers do, other than train and train again? The TA has a huge estate in all the home nations – over 350 establishments. In the same magazine's foreword, the Director (Reserves) admits the TA could be "distributed and positioned more intelligently". Ministers will surely wish to know why that has not been done and why this expensive and inefficient state of affairs has continued.

A smaller TA, reorganised with a reduced estate, must match future defence requirements. The artificially large TA is no longer affordable.

Lester May, Camden Town

Run for the PDSA

If, like me, you've been lucky enough to get a place in the 2011 Virgin London Marathon, I'm sure you'll be extremely excited. This will be my third London Marathon and I'm determined to beat last year's time of 3hrs 14mins.

This year I also want to help make a difference. I have pledged to raise £1,500 for a very worthy cause – veterinary charity PDSA, where I work as a vet.

PDSA provides free veterinary treatment to the sick and injured pets of people in need. The charity provides runners with lots of support, and I'll be sharing training advice and exchange tips with other runners, too. Marathon training can sometimes be a lonely business, so it's great to be part of a team of different abilities and expectations with one shared goal.

The PDSA cheering squad one mile from the end really helped spur me on to the finish line. Plus, after the race, there is somewhere to go and relax, have something to eat and drink, as well as a luxury sports massage to help ease aching muscles.

If you would like to join me and the PDSA team, contact the fundraising department on 01952 204 791 or email marathon@pdsa.org.uk.

SOME 160 students have taken part in a programme designed to engage more pupils in the sciences.

Year eight pupils from Dartford Grammar for Girls joined engineers from Littlebrook power station to take part in electricity supplier npower's Enthuse Day.

The event aimed to inspire students in science, technology, engineering and maths.

Participants were asked to think of ways to improve an existing product or design a new concept, before looking at how to meet and reduce the UK's future demand for energy.

Assistant head teacher Carol Williams said: "The activities gave students an excellent insight into the diversity and challenges which might face an engineer."

A DEALERSHIP has donated two cars to vehicle repair students to give them hands-on experience.

A Ford Escort and Ford Ka were given to the Wealden Skills Centre by Tunbridge Wells-based company Lifestyle Ford.

Peter Isted, managing director at Lifestyle, said: "Having been an apprentice myself, I understand the importance of getting a good start to your career and Wealden's motor vehicle courses give the perfect grounding.

"There's a lot of competition for apprenticeships and to have the benefit of practical experience will stand the students in good stead when it comes to taking the next step."

For more information about courses on offer visit www.wealdenskillscentre.co.uk or call 01825 767755.

BUILDING studies students from West Kent College have visited the new John Lewis home shop to see how a building site operates.

The event coincided with National Construction Week, which is held each year across the UK to inform young people about careers available in the industry.

Pupils took a tour of the site in Tunbridge Wells with the project manager and met construction team members.

Students sell ideas to BBC

By MARIJKE COX
marijke.cox@kosmedia.co.uk

MEDIA students from the University for the Creative Arts have pitched their ideas for a new documentary to BBC bosses.

The undergraduates, who are in their first year of a foundation course in broadcast media, based at Maidstone Studios, came face to face with series editor of BBC One's Inside Out programme Lynda Bell.

Each student was given 10 minutes to present their idea before answering questions from the editor. Course leader Christopher Hunt said the simulation test gave them a taste of what the industry expects.

He said: "Having students pitch their ideas to producers from the broadcast industry, things go up a level. This unique experience gives the students a foretaste of the professionalism that the industry expects, but it also generates a real sense of excitement and good things follow from that."

Students admitted pitching to the BBC editor was a nerve-racking experience, but a fantastic opportunity.

Will Tippett, said: "It felt quite a lot like going into the Dragons' Den, but the feedback and insight into the broadcast media industry we received was invaluable."

FADE TO BLACK: UCA media students working on their skills

Three pitches were chosen and commissioned by the course team to go into production during the autumn term and the completed documentaries will be screened to industry insiders in December. Simon Welsford, broadcast media lecturer, said: "This is a unique project and the work that comes from it promises to be very exciting."

Broadcast students at the University of the Creative Arts, which has campuses in Canterbury, Maidstone and Rochester, have access to modern television studios.

Places are still available on the foundation degree broadcast media course, which starts in January, 2011. The closing date for applications is January 15.

Students can also progress from foundation to a BA Hons degree. Prospective students can find out more about at UCA Maidstone's open day on Saturday, November 20. A shuttle bus will take visitors to the studios.

Open days are also taking place at UCA Canterbury on Saturday, October 23, and Wednesday, November 17; and UCA Rochester on October 16, Wednesday, November 3, and Saturday, December 4. For more information visit www.ucreative.ac.uk/opendays.

Broaden horizons with language courses

MANDARIN, Japanese and Italian are just a few of the language courses on offer through the new Language Express programme at the University of Kent at Canterbury.

From Monday, lessons for beginners in English, French, German, Italian, Japanese, Mandarin, Polish, Russian and Spanish will be available at the university's Centre for English and World Languages.

A range of intermediate and advanced courses could also be rolled out, depending on demand. The lessons will include an introduction to the language, helping those who wish to build on existing knowledge and improve confidence in language use.

Centre director Anthony Manning said: "Language Express is designed to be an affordable and accessible way of developing language skills.

"Since there are no exams on completion, each participant will receive an attendance document which confirms they have followed the course. Whether students are looking to boost their CVs or simply read a menu, our courses are the place to start or enhance language skills."

The lessons will run at lunchtime or in the evening and will consist of two one-hour sessions per week.

Each course costs £200 and runs for 26 weeks. For further details email languageexpress@kent.ac.uk or visit www.kent.ac.uk/language-express.

LIKE the Grim Reaper, car depreciation seems unavoidable and dispects status.

From the luxury limo to the humble hatchback, most new cars lose a wad of money the minute they're driven off the dealer forecourt, but while some carry on plummeting, a few arrest their decline and may even become the valuable collectors' cars of the future.

But which are these so-called future classics?

British Car Auctions (BCA), the nationwide group with a site at Paddock Wood, suggests some that may gain such status while remaining affordable – for now.

But BCA spokesman Tim Naylor warned: "Second guessing future trends is never an exact science – after all who would have thought the 1980s would get fashionable again? In the collectors' car market, beauty really is in the eye of the beholder.

"Rarity does not necessarily make for desirability, nor does an exclusive and limited model run and high 'list price' necessarily mean a car will be worth more in years to come."

Here are BCA's Top Five Future Classics of the past decade:

- BMW Mini – always desirable, with early Mini One models holding their values well, selling for around £3,500-4,000 even at 100k mileages. Demand is highest for convertibles, while the Clubman and new Countryman models are other possible classics to come.
- VW Beetle – another retro car and, with production due to stop soon, it could be the time to buy. Early saloons are affordable between £3,000-4,000, but even the earliest cabriolets remain expensive at £7,000-8,000 at a sensible mileage.
- Citroën C3 Pluriel – good value at around £2,000 for early ones on 60,000 miles. It can be a convertible or even a 'pick-up' with the rear seats folded – useability and eccentricity that may bestow collectable status.
- Mazda RX8 – affordable and quirky enough, with its rotary engine and rear-ward-opening 'suicide doors', to go classic and currently a steal at £3,000 for an early 50,000-miler.
- Vauxhall Omega V6 – these ceased production in 2003, but £2,000 buys a decent late 70k miler; a top-spec 2003-reg 3.2 V6 Elite will be nearer £3,000.

Two-seater sports cars are good bet too says BCA. The Mazda MX-5 re-introduced the traditional two-seat roadster to the mainstream and early ones are relatively cheap to buy, but there are lots around.

The relatively rare and free-revving Honda S2000 could be a better bet and the even scarcer Lotus Elise and closely-related Vauxhall VX220 are other strong contenders.

MG-Rover's long-term 'classic' legacy is difficult to judge so soon after its demise, but BCA believes the MG-F and TF roadsters can only appreciate now – a well-preserved MG-F can be bought for under £1,000 and an MG-TF for around £2,500.

Of the saloons, the Rover 75 and ZT 260 SE V8s are the pick of the bunch with their Ford Mustang 4.6-litre engines – pay around £4,000 for a late-2004 Rover version at 80,000 miles, but the MG will be double that.

Back in the present, the Fiat 500 combines a classic shape with contemporary design and engineering and should hold its value well, as will any performance badged cars such as RS-badged Fords, Fiat Abarths, Renaultsports, BMW-M series and WRX Subarus.

Focus looks sharp even on its run-out

OBLIVION is just around the corner for the current Ford Focus as a radical new model arrives next spring.

But canny marketeers at Ford know to dress a car on run-out and that is the reason why the new Focus Sport special edition looks so tempting with its ST hot hatchback-pattern 16-inch alloys, sat nav, Bluetooth and USB connectivity, voice control and rear parking sensors.

It also has seats trimmed to flagship Titanium level yet buyers get this £1,500 of extra kit for just £700 more than an equivalent Zetec model, and it is offered with the two most popular Focus engine options: a 1.6-litre petrol (£16,545) or same capacity diesel (£17,845).

So confident is Ford about its appeal that it is making no secret of the fact that this 'fully-loaded' five-door model will still be available after the new Focus goes on sale in early 2011.

Passat goes on and on and on…

VOLKSWAGEN'S Passat BlueMotion has set a new Guinness World Record for the longest distance travelled by a standard production passenger car on a tank of fuel.

The three-day record bid started from Maidstone and went to the South of France and almost made it back; the Passat finally ran out of fuel close to Calais after covering 1,526.63 miles and averaging nearly 90mpg – some 50 per cent better than its claimed average.

The route mainly followed French autoroutes, but included some town driving, resulting in an average speed of just over 45mph from 77.25 litres of standard forecourt diesel, with an overall fuel consumption of 89.83 miles per gallon.

The BlueMotion is powered by a VW 1.6-litre diesel developing 105 PS (102bhp) and, like similarly eco-friendly Polo and Golf BlueMotion models, has modified aerodynamics and a lower ride height, Stop/Start for reduced consumption and emissions in town traffic, programmed battery charging, longer gearing and low rolling resistance tyres.

Despite this, VW claims the Passat BlueMotion is completely conventional to drive, service and maintain.

Crossing over to bigger sales

NISSAN 'crossed over' into the big league in September when sales of its Qashqai and newly launched Juke (pictured) crossovers made it the UK's seventh most popular car brand.

Significantly, it was also fourth biggest in terms of sales to private buyers.

The Qashqai continues to drive Nissan's fortunes and help the UK balance of payments – much of the production from the Sunderland UK plant goes abroad – and UK sales have topped 30,000 so far this year – up 38 per cent on 2009.

But the Qashqai has a rival out the same factory; the smaller Juke sold 1,600 in its first week on sale and should maintain Nissan's upward momentum – its total sales in 2009 are up 21 per cent.

Three into one does go

THESE are hard times economically and we all have to do our bit for the environment, so we are giving you three road tests in one here – green or what?

Look closely though and you will see that these three cars are virtually the same; the result of a Toyota-led project that manufactures the Toyota Aygo, Peugeot 107 and Citroën C1 from one production line in the Czech Republic.

The three manufacturers have used clever styling tweaks to blur such obvious cloning.

Of the trio, the Aygo is perhaps the most upmarket yet conservative, but actually starts from a lower price officially (£8,220), though you are less likely to get any discount or packages.

The Citroën and Peugeot both start from £8,495, with the former having the edge on style after a midlife makeover left the Peugeot looking like it has had a Dyson vacuum cleaner nozzle grafted onto its nose.

Citroën dabbled briefly with a diesel option but it was pricey and fairly pointless at this end of the market, so all three sisters have standardised on a lively little 68bhp 998cc three-cylinder petrol engine that will just about give you a 100mph maximum and 60mph in about 14 seconds in manual form – all three cars are available with an auto option too for real urban 'stop/go' traffic conditions.

But performance figures are an irrelevance here – this trio is about A to B motoring on the cheap.

They are city cars in size and available in three and five-door format – and you might as well have the latter for the sake of a few hundred quid – but they are not horrible on motorways and come with modern safety aids and build quality. The key point though is that they should average more than 60mpg and will incur no road tax in year one and just £20 a year thereafter – motoring doesn't come much cheaper than this.

ROAD TEST

by STEVE LOADER

Toyota Aygo, Peugeot 107 and Citroën C1

In everyday use, the Aygo/107/C1 is practical – the rear seats split/fold 50/50 – as well as stylish and spacious for its size, but it is strictly a four-seater and a tiny boot is accessed by a lift-up glass panel rather than a proper tailgate.

The steering and driving experience is light and nippy for in-town use though and, despite its compact size, the car has a wheelbase and low centre of gravity well able to smooth the bumps and corners.

The free-revving engine and easy gearbox even reveals a sporty edge reminiscent of the original Mini, though this will undoubtedly undo the economy drive that persuaded you to buy in the first place.

And, despite custom packs available you will also be hard-pressed to cut a dash like a modern Mini.

DrivingReview

by STEVE LOADER
CHIEF DRIVING CORRESPONDENT
steve.loader@kosmedia.co.uk

Kia Venga

IT'S not hard to see why Kia launched the Venga earlier this year.

No, it's not intended to be a tribute to Arsenal's long-running soccer manager Arsène, but mini-MPVs like the Kia are where the crowds and the big money are.

Last month's Paris Motor Show proved the point as the wraps came off three big new players. Toyota unveiled the Verso-S, a rather belated though impressive challenger in a sector the Japanese giant claims to have invented with the original Yaris Verso (2000-2005), though it was so pug-ugly you could argue that Toyota nearly strangled a new niche at birth.

Hyundai chose Paris to reveal the ix20 – sister to the Venga, since Kia is the other half of the huge Hyundai group.

And Honda underlined how its Jazz – the car that started the whole mini-MPV thing in my opinion, and is now in its second generation – still offers clever variations on the theme in the form of a new hybrid petrol-electric version.

But the Venga is already out there, and though I had reservations at launch time, a week with the car really shouldered those aside and I use that expression deliberately, because it is interior width that impresses most.

Of course, a spacious cabin is a must in this class and the Venga uses a long wheelbase within compact overall dimensions disguised by clever lines – the deep crease across the doors squeezes the depth of the flanks and lowers the high roofline visually.

In short, it's a tidy looking and even elegant execution of a five-door shape expected to cram in so much.

And interior height, width and legroom is impressive; families will note that a genuine three-seater rear bench with a flat floor across the entire car – no discomfort for 'piggy in the middle' then – and space liberated by folding the rear seats flat is huge, so you are buying a van for the family fleet too.

The interior quality shows Kia's rapid progression from its no hoper 'Motor Show 1964' interiors of just a few years ago, to being the leading budget marque and Honda must be worried by the Venga's overall keen pricing (from £11,495) versus the Jazz, though the latter starts from £10,990.

Official Government Environment Data. Fuel consumption figures mpg (litres/100km) and CO2 emissions (g/km). Chevrolet Range: Urban 42.8 (6.6)-21.5 (13.1), Extra Urban 67.3 (4.2)-39.7 (7.1), Combined 55.4 (5.1)-30.3 (9.3), CO2 Emissions 119-234 g/km.

What's more, Kia used the Venga launch to extend its unique seven-year/100,000-mile warranty across the board; three years/60,000 miles is the industry norm and only Hyundai comes close with its five-year deal.

So, the Venga is not only clever and smart looking, but also a brilliant deal, except that the powertrains and ride quality can be coarse and the driving experience is fairly lacklustre.

After a week with the superior 89bhp 1.4-litre petrol model though, I don't see this as a deal breaker. It is a bit unrefined, but there is plenty of power even when you cram this little spaceship, while the mpg should average in the mid-40s. There is also a 124bhp 1.6-litre unit with an automatic 'box (from £14,100), but it is not particularly economical and high emissions make the road tax steep at £250 in year one and £180 thereafter.

There is an 89bhp diesel too (from £12,760) with Kia's low emissions and consumption EcoDynamics package including 'Intelligent Stop and Go' to automatically kill and revive the engine in turgid traffic conditions; it could give you an average of more than 60mpg and offers zero road tax in the first year and a pif-fling £30 after that. But it will cost you £1,300 more than a petrol equivalent, whatever trim you choose, and does feel lumpy – the petrol is livelier and simply nicer to be in.

INSIDE THIS WEEK

THERE'S a sense of a lull before the storm at the moment with the coalition Government's Comprehensive Spending Review due to hit next Wednesday.

And I can't promise you a cloud-free horizon for now either, because we touch upon 'cloud computing' – the future of computing or not? – in our Big Interview with Thanet-based computer guru Gareth Johns.

I also have to tell you that while many business experts say we must go on an export drive, we are not alone in looking to new foreign opportunities – check out the story inside on how Ostend in Belgium wants to build traffic into Kent.

KRBS aims to pour all savings into One

By STEVE LOADER
steve.loader@kosmedia.co.uk

ONE of Britain's oldest surviving building societies is set to disappear in a merger to create a new banking force, OneSavings.

Kent Reliance (KRBS) can trace its roots back to 1847 and is a rare example of the nation's once thriving mutual (member-owned) sector, but now aims to pool its £2.2 billion assets with American private equity firm JC Flowers, which will invest £50 million and gain a 40 per cent stake in the new bank.

The motivation for KRBS – ranked 11th in the UK by asset value – stems from the Northern Rock crash in 2007, which made it harder for traditional mutual societies to raise or attract cash to build their businesses.

City experts believe JC Flowers aims to use this situation to woo other small societies to build OneSavings and challenge traditional banking players Barclays, HSBC, Lloyds TSB and RBS NatWest and the increasingly powerful Spanish-owned Santander.

The conviction gathered strength with the American firm's recent hiring of the former head of the UK's fourth biggest building society, the Skipton. John Goodfellow ran the Yorkshire society for 17 years and says he is acting as an advisor on the mutual sector, while strenuously denying his former employer is in the US firm's sights. JC Flowers' founder Christopher Flowers – a former partner in American banking and finance firm Goldman Sachs – made abortive moves on Northern Rock, Friends Provident, and Bradford and Bingley, before succeeding with KRBS.

But the plans must still be ratified by the Financial Services Authority and, more importantly in this instance, gain approval from 75 per cent of Kent Reliance savers and borrowers under the old mutual society structure.

Members will be balloted and the result announced at a special meeting of the society on November 19. A 'yes' vote will allow the new bank to be created in February, 2011.

Member reaction has been muted since the proposals were released in August and it is likely that dissent will be mollified by breaking news this week that the JC Flowers' stake had been cut from 49 to 40 per cent and confirmation that KRBS would retain control.

But the biggest hurdle is likely to be that, unlike the rash of building society de-mutualisations in the 1990s, no windfall payments are being tabled to entice members to agree to this scheme.

KRBS has some 180,000 members and 45 staff and has been one of the fastest-growing building societies in the country over the past decade, while slashing overheads.

Fourteen outlets have been cut to eight and only two are now full branches – Chatham and Hempstead – with CEO Mike Lazenby happy to brand traditional branches as "liabilities".

As it has pruned profile on Kent high streets, KRBS has sought it elsewhere through sponsorship of football clubs Gillingham, Charlton Athletic and Whitstable Town.

BUSINESS WEEK Live

Spending review explained

BUSINESSES in Kent have mixed emotions ahead of next Wednesday's Comprehensive Spending Review by the coalition – relief that the UK debt mountain is being tackled, but fears for confidence, trade and jobs.

And there will be many questions and challenges raised – ones that Business Week Live (BWL) aims to answer on Wednesday, November 10, exactly three weeks after the Government's pronouncements.

Billed as an essential event for business owners, entrepreneurs and managers, BWL has been created by Archant KOS Media.

Delegates and visitors already registered include MDs and CEOs, FDs and many other directors and managers from all business sectors, and representing companies from SMEs to larger private and public organisations and agencies.

Archant KOS Media commercial director Christine Davidson said: "The appeal is BWL's offer of true value to attendees at a crucial time in their planning process, post-CSR and prior to the crunch year of 2011 – everyone and their businesses needs to know where the opportunities will be.

In addition to sourcing suppliers and partners, visitors will get free access to a conference programme and workshop of more than 20 speakers. All delegates attending the inspirational manager session presented by Neil Annis will walk away with access to over £2,500 worth of training resource. And Kent Business School is providing a free Business Clinic during the show. Companies can book a 30-minute slot with a clinic team comprising MBA (Master of Business Administration) students, MBA alumni and MBA academics.

MBA students have an average of 10 years' management experience here and abroad: "No hard-pressed firm can really pass up on the chance of brainstorming their company problems with such experts when just one good tip could save their company," said Christine.

Other hot topics include:

Getting Investment: hear Phil Bevean, portfolio director for the Kent and Medway Innovation Team, and Liz Dolding, partner and commercial legal expert from Warners Solicitors, tell you how to turn your ideas into profitable business.

Going Digital: apps, stats, vids, mobiles and the web – what does it all mean for business? Come and hear from leading expert Jonnie Jensen, who has more than 10 years' experience in the sector with leading companies such as Lycos Europe.

Inspirational Management: Neil Annis has over 20 years' experience in operational management, sales, change management, training and coaching, and personal and organisational development.

Multi-Channel Marketing: it can seem daunting and complex, but leading specialist Ben Edwards can navigate you to the benefits for your business and profits.

And join the Big Debate: PM David Cameron launched the Big Society to empower communities to run post offices, libraries, transport services and shape housing projects. What are the implications of this for businesses, and how can they be involved? Come and join a panel session with leading experts from local business and social enterprise.

Exhibiting companies leading the line up at the County Showground, Detling, include BT, East Malling Conference Centre, IPS international, KCC Low Carbon Futures, Kent FA, Kent Science Park, Manston Airport, Medway Safety, NatWest, University of Greenwich, Village Hotels, The Kent Foundation, Circatron and Comcheck.

Comment

IF I WAS Sir Philip Green, I would be hopping mad. The man who sent bloated High Street giants such as Bhs and Debenhams to Fat Club was asked to investigate a training regime for another lumbering fattie – Whitehall.

What he found came as no surprise: waste on a scale that even the dopiest civil servant would ban at home. It certainly couldn't be allowed in a small business.

But, instead of thanking the entrepreneur, who did all this for nowt but could have charged a colossal hourly rate and been worth every penny – unlike those who agree ill-founded Government deals and contracts – Sir P has been criticised for allegedly cheating the taxman of £1.2 billion from his UK business empire and paying it to his wife, a resident of Monaco.

So what? Rather that the public sector showed nous like that than the ineptitude I saw for myself when – in a moment of stupidity – I was persuaded into lucrative copywriting for a Whitehall department.

Only later did I find that while gleefully earning twice my normal daily fee and working from home, the consultancy employing me was charging the Government five times my real world fee and pocketing three-fifths of the dosh for doing absolutely nothing.

But then the contract was called in; someone smelled a rat, so I wrote to my ministry contact and offered to do the work direct at the same fee as I had been paid by 'Greedy Communications'. OK, I was being greedy, too. It was still twice my usual rate, though two-fifths of what Greedy charged.

Silence. Have they really wised up now and rumbled that even I'm charging double?

No. Just more bureaucratic dithering before an astounding result: Greedy was back on board and complacent enough to re-hire me as before, despite me trying to cut them out of the deal. Multiply stories like this by not very much and you see why the public sector wastes so much.

Don't waste our waste, say CBI chiefs

MINISTERS have been urged to use non-recyclable waste to help meet the UK's energy needs, slash volumes sent to landfill, and help meet climate change targets.

The call comes as the Confederation of British Industry launches a new report – Going to Waste: Making the Case for Energy From Waste – highlighting how waste could help the nation meet its domestic power needs.

The technologies it advocates include anaerobic digestion, where biological processes produce bio-gas from waste, and incineration. It stresses how these provide consistent, homegrown and reliable power supplies unaffected by the weather.

The CBI reckons strong Government direction on planning, financing and procurement could allow the UK to quadruple energy from waste from 1.5 per cent to six per cent in just five years.

The alternative is EU fines of about £182.5 million a year unless the UK curbs its landfill practice.

A CBI spokesman said: "We cannot continue dumping rubbish in landfill.

"Waste that can't be recycled could be used to heat homes and produce electricity, as well as improving our energy security.

"Across Europe, generating energy from waste is common and compatible with high levels of recycling."

CHANNEL PARTNER: Jan Allaert is Ostend port's commercial manager

AT A TIME when Kent businesses are being exhorted to think 'Export!' they have been reminded that it might not be one-way traffic, writes Nick Ames.

The port of Ostend in Belgium wants to expand cross-Channel trade with the UK, and especially via Ramsgate.

Currently a commercial agreement between LD Lines and Transeuropa Ferries sees cars and freight travel between the two ports daily.

But Ostend wants to expand its berthing to take larger vessels and is keen to stress the advantages of the toll-free Belgian motorway network over its French counterpart. Ostend port's commercial manager Jan Allaert said: "We are very much open for business here and want to increase our links with the UK – particularly the port of Ramsgate.

"Ostend has a history of trading with Kent which stretches back many years – in fact to 1836. That was when we had our first cross-Channel link bringing in vessels from Dover."

Mr Allaert said part of Ostend's attractions was good links to elsewhere in northern Europe: "Our location is a major plus point for the port. Motorways link us with Brussels and all points north into Germany and eastwards to the Czech Republic, Slovakia and as far away as Ukraine.

"With so much trade coming from lorries doing the run to eastern Europe, that is a plus. Even the four-hour crossing time to Ramsgate works in our favour. Drivers have longer to catch up on their statutory rest periods.

"Then there is the question of road tolls. Belgium has as good a motorway network as anywhere in Europe, yet unlike many countries – especially France – it is free for drivers to use."

Mr Allaert accepts the marketplace for HGV traffic is a crowded one with Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne all being competitors, along with the Channel Tunnel. But Ostend handles 11,000 trucks a month and the figure is rising.

He added: "We want a larger share of the market because we feel we can offer an extremely good deal. That is why we are pushing ahead with our expansion plans.

"New harbour walls, set to be in place by 2012 and funded by the local Flemish government will allow us to take larger vessels.

"This in turn will mean more lorries, more money for developing our facilities and a better service for customers."

EMPLOYERS in Kent and the South East are missing out on millions each year by failing to invest in the health and wellbeing of their staff, says a report by the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy.

Not unnaturally, the CSP argues that physiotherapy services can save firms through higher productivity and fewer absences from back pain and joint injuries or musculoskeletal disorders (MSDs).

More than half a million people suffer MSDs in the UK, according to the Health and Safety Executive, making it the most common work-related health problem. But the CSP report found:

- Three in 10 managers believe staff who call in sick with an MSD are well enough to work, but just don't want to;
- More than a third (35 per cent) find such absences irritating because others have to take on more work, while 22 per cent say it's a drain their business cannot afford;
- Fifty per cent of workers feel bosses don't care about their health;
- A quarter fear being sacked or facing redundancy later if they take time off sick;
- Nearly two-thirds (63 per cent) of small-to-medium enterprises do not provide occupational health services to staff.

The survey follows earlier CSP research showing 36 per cent of employees work all day without a lunch break and 31 per cent experienced physical pain at work at least once a week.

A CSP spokesman said: "We recognise it is tempting in difficult economic times for businesses to cut back on health and wellbeing initiative. But that is a false economy, because ignoring a recurring condition can potentially lead to lower productivity and high temporary staffing costs."

BLUEWATER – Kent's giant shopping mall – could be worth around £1.7 billion, according to the price tag on a 7.5 stake being offered for sale. Hermes Real Estate, a long-running but minority shareholder in the project since it opened 10 years ago, is selling its holding valued at £120 million after deciding to re-balance its property portfolio at a time when the Kent site is regularly outperforming a depressed retail sector.

FORMER brewing giant Whitbread – now better known for its restaurants and hotels portfolio – will open a new £1.3 million Premier Inn hotel in Rainham High Street on November 1.

The site, alongside Whitbread's Manor Farm Beefeater Grill, will offer 26 bedrooms from £58 per night and has created 15 jobs across housekeeping and reception.

ONE-man-band businesses must not be spooked as the Halloween deadline looms for filing paper self-assessment tax returns. That's the advice from the South East Society of Chartered Accountants, which points out that the taxman will only apply penalties – starting with an automatic £100 – and mounting interest charges for the year ending April 5, 2010, if they still subsequently file a paper return, but an electronic online return buys three months' leeway to January 31.

GULLANDS Solicitors is aiding Maidstone's brightest hope for future sporting success and one of Britain's highest ranking junior rowers, Morgan Hellen.

He has represented Great Britain at international events and has three European championship gold medals and aims to represent GB at the Olympics.

Morgan has recently combined training with studying for his A-levels at Oakwood Park Grammar School, where his love of rowing started.

Gullands' managing partner Richard Cripps said: "Morgan is talented and dedicated and we wish him every success with his ambitions to reach the 2012 Olympics."

System signals award triumph

By STEVE LOADER
steve.loader@kosmedia.co.uk

A HERNE Bay-based fire and security company has won two industry awards after assistance from a business solutions firm.

EMS Radio Fire and Security Systems produces wireless fire detection and security systems and took two awards at this year's Best Factory Awards.

The first win was in the category of Best Small/Medium Enterprise; and it also received a highly commended in the Best Electronics and Electrical Plant category.

The company's fire alarm and security sensors are battery-powered and communicate with controllers using secure dual-frequency signalling.

After being shortlisted, EMS called in the Government-backed Manufacturing Advisory Service South East to audit and ensure its factory floor organisation was in the best possible shape for the judging process – the company was already a member of the MAS South East Kent Best Practice Club.

It also sent staff on MAS South East course, while MAS specialists Ian Pateman and Rachel Doyle arrived in Herne Bay and spent a day analysing potential improvements.

EMS MD Chris Mulvihill said: "Having worked hard to improve our manufacturing performance, we are both proud and delighted with our Best Factory Award achievements.

"Working with MAS South East has enabled us to focus our continuous improvement programme, and the audit allowed us to implement actions that further improve our on-time delivery, the overall quality of our products, and the quality of communication within the factory.

"As a direct result of the audit, we implemented a series of monitor screens into each work area that draw real-time data from our ERP [enterprise resource planning] system.

"These screens communicate the schedule adherence and quality performance of the work area, allowing us to easily observe and control what is happening around the factory floor in real time.

"This now allows us target and pinpoint issues for immediate attention and action."

He added: "The MAS Best Practice Club is a great platform for focusing improvements and developing best practice tools and techniques.

"The environment in which the clubs are delivered is perfect for putting those tools and techniques into context, seeing how other manufacturers, regardless of industry sector, are doing it."

HOWLETTS Wild Animal Park is enjoying its first-ever honey harvest.

The Bekesbourne park, better known for its work with endangered species such as gorillas and black rhinos, starting keeping bees last year after realising they had become just as worthy of protection as larger species.

Bee populations have been devastated by environmental pressures and disease.

Three hives produced a yield of 150 jars, half of which went on sale in the Howletts farm shop.

Head gardener David Sutton said: "The honey is delicious and selling very quickly.

"Perhaps being harvested from flowers that tigers and elephants roam among added a touch of wilderness to the mix.

"The importance of bees is easily overlooked, but they have a vital impact on the food chain; agriculture is almost entirely reliant on their pollination."

Easy-peasy deal

A SWEET pea deal has been negotiated by a Kent company to secure more than 14,000 tonnes of the ever-popular vegetable.

STEPHEN WAUGH

Ardo UK struck the deal with Anglian Pea Growers – a 150-strong farmers' cooperative – and will take next year's 14,800-tonne crop, making each farmer around £20,000.

The Kent-based frozen fruit and vegetable processor said the deal restores a 60-year tradition of pea growing and will take UK pea production in 2011 up to 130,000 tonnes. Ardo is a Belgian-owned group that produces and markets frozen fruit, vegetables, rice and pasta to the retail, food service and industrial ingredients sectors.

It has 15 factories across eight countries including its UK head office and major plant at Charing, near Ashford, where it has just installed a new pea packing line.

Ardo UK MD Stephen Waugh said: "East Anglian peas are excellent, grown to the highest standards.

"We are delighted to secure this contract, which is welcome news for British farmers and consumers. The produce will be grown, prepared, packed and consumed within the UK, adding value at every stage.

"We are confident there will be strong demand for this quality British product."

Richard Hirst, chairman of Anglian Pea Growers, said: "East Anglia has a long history of pea growing. The deal with Ardo UK is good news for our members.

"Peas are a high value product and an integral part of the farming process as they fix nitrogen in the soil and can be harvested in between other main crops."

After next June's harvest, the peas will be prepared and frozen within two-and-a-half hours of being picked and then packed at Charing, ready for sale and distribution.

AT YOUR SERVER: Gareth Johns of Business Computer Solutions

KOS media BUSINESS WEEK

THE BIG INTERVIEW

Offices have been revolutionised over the past 20 years. Even those of us around long enough to witness the before and after find it hard to envisage how it was in the days when few offices had even a single computer. But reliance on computer power and higher employee output places businesses at great risk from hardware meltdown or software conflicts and the dreaded computer viruses.
And IT investment and strategy is also a continuously moving picture, so business editor STEVE LOADER emailed Gareth Johns, boss of Thanet-based Business Computer Solutions and asked him about managing office IT now and in the future.

GARETH JOHNS

GARETH Johns caught the computer bug early. "There were 750 kids and just one computer when I was at school in Broadstairs and I was the kid who monopolised that computer," he recalled.

In 1981 he also bought one of the first mass-produced computers, a Sinclair ZX-81, and was soon writing his own programs.

By the time he was 18, he had written and was managing the software and computer for the parts section at a local garage: "That lasted until I was 21, when I realised I was then running the whole garage parts section rather than furthering my career in computing."

He went on to buy and sell and build computers, and the software too, and now runs a highly successful Ramsgate firm, Business Computer Solutions (BCS), managing and troubleshooting the IT operations of some 60 clients across 170 business sites and their 1,240 PCs and laptops, plus attendant servers and hardware.

But it was a life of 'feast and famine' until just over two years ago when he changed his business model from what he calls a "break/fix" operation – still the sector norm – to a more strategic operation where clients pay a flat fee every month, founded on a basic £10 a month per PC.

"I realised it was the way to go," said Gareth. "Instead of simply reacting to customers' problems, we are now ahead of them. Before, if something broke, we would fix it, be the hero and get paid. If it didn't break, we didn't eat. The proactive managed approach means it rarely breaks in the first place. Potential problems are identified long before the machine's user hits down time, loses stuff or the machine simply goes 'pop'.

"It's now strategic, whereas before you either never had enough engineers on hand or were busy finding things for them to do. It's the same for customers. They have consistency. They are not waiting for a good month with IT to be followed by a bad one with massive disruption and staff down time."

It has to be the way forward for his sector, he argues, although it has meant a £150,000 investment for BCS over two years; £95,000 alone on remote accessing and monitoring software allowing individual machines to be monitored and problems headed off.

Users report a fault and register a virtual 'ticket', which feeds into a 'triage' section where urgency and the problem are

GARETH JOHNS' CV

- 1986 – left college and joined Ford dealership
- 1989 – became self-employed computer engineer and programmer
- 1990 – opened a shop selling computer games, software and hardware
- 1991 – started The Computer Foundation, serving the home computer market and then evolving into all-round computer support operation
- 1996 – company expanded and reborn as BCS to provide IT solutions

accessed. BCS averages 1,200 tickets a month and most are sorted out within 10 minutes. The engineer reports back to the person who logged it and they then receive a questionnaire to check quality of service.

A manager at the client also has full remote access to this dialogue and an overview if there are several problems across their company.

If it can't be fixed remotely, an engineer and van is sent. Engineers rotate their time on the road or at the desk at the firm's HQ in Elms Avenue, Ramsgate, where it employs 13 full-time staff.

This includes 24-hour coverage: "The office world is round-the-clock now, though our out-of-hours contact tends to be people working from home trying to connect into the office for something they need urgently for a report or project they are working on.

"I suppose our finest hour was being contacted by a customer travelling across Norway en route to a crucial presentation in Germany. Something had taken over his laptop and stopping him connecting into his office. The guy was at his wits' end.

"We were able to go in remotely, stop the infection and sort the problem and he made that presentation. If he and his company didn't think the service was worth £10 a month before, they do now.

"Actually most of our customers saw the sense in the deal and realised we take a big hit upfront because, while we get £10 a month per machine, we have to take a very strategic view of where that machine will be in a year's time and beyond, so we throw time and money at it initially to ensure that the client gets the continuity they expect from their new deal.

"Fact is, companies don't invest in IT usually until it breaks and they also fail to consider the cost of wasted productivity and capital investment (on the computer) while it is offline.

"I'm happy to lose money initially though, because long-term investment brings mutual benefits."

He applies a similar philosophy on equipping his engineers with vans: "I won't run old vans. Apart from the fact tatty old vans don't reflect well on the company when out and about, you fail the customer if the van fails. Of course, even new vans break down, but customers recognise this can happen. They are less likely to forgive if you run a piece of junk. A new van also gives my guys a sense of pride."

But surely customers' employees are less appreciative of his firm's position as a potential spy on their company with their remote support tools? "It's really important to be seen by the customer as a trusted advisor, as any in-house IT manager, would be. And we are talking about work machines for a work application. We have to make sure they are patched, updated, secure, virus protected, fit for purpose, the customer's capital investment is protected and that system time is not wasted or risked through social networking and non-work-related surfing."

He is also big on spam protection before it is downloaded onto the client's network because, he points out, this slows down valuable online capacity: "We can scan out all the Viagra and replica watches stuff that just clogs things up, but in among this is the malware that could really mess things up and you always find someone in a company gets curious and opens something they shouldn't …"

But where will office IT go?

Gareth said: "The pace of change is even faster now, which makes it hard for anyone to be certain, but a lot is pinned on 'cloud computing' and big names like Microsoft and Google are in there, but it relies on your software and most of your files and in-house resources being available to you online via the cloud or remote servers. The worry for many companies will be 'what if I lose my connection?' and cannot work. We are looking at it for some clients and it might well suit companies with very mobile workforces in areas with secure internet connections, but it won't suit everyone."

Gareth, 42, is married with one daughter and is a motoring fan who also enjoys spending time with Riley, his Parsons terrier cross, going to any pub in walking distance.

• Look out for more on cloud computing in a future article from BCS.

GARETH'S TOP TIPS

• Work with trusted suppliers – "I know my own field of expertise, but I'm the first to recognise areas where I'm not strong, so I take recommendations, do my homework and find the right people to support me elsewhere. We've even outsourced our own website because we would rather concentrate on our particular IT strengths rather than try to do something someone else can do faster and better."

• Don't skimp on capital equipment – "Older and unreliable equipment and vehicles will cost you time and productivity and the reputation of your company."

BUSINESS WEEK SPOTLIGHT

ON HOSPITALITY, TRAVEL AND TOURISM

Ahoy there tourists

MEDWAY has launched a website designed to draw visitors to the area's wealth of marine heritage attractions as well as other English and foreign towns on the Channel and southern North Sea coasts, writes Steve Loader:

The site www.maritime-history.eu highlights the strong common culture and seafaring traditions of this extensive maritime region and uses video and sound recordings as well as pictures to highlight fishing, boatbuilding, smuggling, cross-Channel transport, lighthouses and historic dockyards like that of Chatham itself, which opened the all-new flagship museum and gallery No1 Smithery in July.

The site is also part of the HMS project – heritage and maritime memories in the two seas region – a co-operation between 30 partners in Belgium, France, the Netherlands and the UK, with Medway Council as lead partner.

More information and films are set to be added to the site and Medway Council's tourism chief Cllr Jane Chitty said: "We are delighted to be the project's lead partner. This reflects our strong naval tradition, and complements our bid for World Heritage Site status for Chatham Dockyard and its defences."

The HMS project was launched in October, 2009, and is partly funded by the European Interreg IVA 'two seas programme' – a 167 million euro programme that supports 24 cross-border projects between neighbouring regions.

DINERS in Kent and the South East don't tend to be moaners, according to eating out review site www.wheresgoodtoeat.com.

A survey of 1,000 respondents across the region, designed to establish how often diners have cause to complain, saw poor service come second to an overwhelming dissatisfaction with the temperature of the main courses, but also showed that up to 40 per cent of poor experiences go unreported.

Spokesman Gordon Lloyd West said: "The survey has confirmed that as a nation we still don't like to make a fuss, but the only way standards will go up is if restaurants and cafes have customer feedback. At www.wheresgoodtoeat.com diners have the chance to share their experience when they eat out and also for restaurant owners to monitor their performance and respond if things are not up to scratch."

Work under way on housing sites

KENT'S housing developers, Bellway, hope to have their two housing sites at St Lawrence completed next May after work began last week.

The redevelopment project is now fully under way with the club having started work on the facelift of the old ground at the end of last month and now Bellway have started the groundwork for their two projects.

The diggers have been out in force since last Friday, with the net site the initial focus (pictured).

It's hoped the two new housing sites will be completed on the Bat & Ball site and at the top of the drive by May and the club is keen for the two roads to have cricket-related names.

Coles' Kent uncertainty

All-rounder says the wait to sort out his contract is playing on his mind, but he wants to stay at St Lawrence

By GLENN PEARSON

ONE of Kent's bright hopes for the future has yet to be offered a new contract at St Lawrence and has admitted the uncertainty is playing on his mind.

Matt Coles, the 20-year-old all-rounder, is one of several of the club's young stars out of contract at the end of next season, which means if Kent decided against offering a new deal this winter, other counties would be entitled to speak to those players in the summer.

Undoubtedly the major highlight of what was a disappointing season for Kent, Coles will surely be at the front of the queue when it comes to extending contracts at St Lawrence. The fast bowler grabbed his chance in the first-team with both hands, sending down 234 overs in championship cricket and claiming 24 wickets at an average of 36. Coles was among a crop of young players offered the carrot of an opportunity in first-class cricket this summer, and while the likes of Phil Edwards and Warren Lee failed to take that chance, the Maidstone-born left-hander quickly forced his way into the side and made it hard for team selectors to drop him.

IMPACT: Matt Coles' all-round form was one of the high points for Kent in an otherwise poor year

Coles has been sent to Perth, Australia, to continue his development over the winter as part of a six-month ECB scholarship, and while he is looking forward to working on his game, tying up his future at Kent dominates his thoughts.

"It plays on my mind, even when I am over here," he told KoS in an interview from Australia. "I do not know what they are going to come back with, but I am pretty sure they want to keep me from what Farby [head coach Paul Farbrace] has told me.

"It looks like I will get another year, I would rather another two but it looks like one, so we will have to go from there.

"Hopefully it will be sorted out as soon as possible, before Christmas would be good."

Having played for Kent at under-13, under-15 and under-17 level before being accepted on the Academy programme, Coles is a genuine product of the county's coaching set-up, and staying at St Lawrence is his number one priority.

"I have grown up at Kent and have come through the age groups so I do not want to leave the club," he said.

"I want to stay as loyal to Kent as I can like Rob Key and James Tredwell have. I do not want to have the hassle of going to another team. Kent will give me the best opportunity to play first-team cricket and that's what I have to be looking at."

Coles has shown genuine promise as an all-rounder, registering a maiden half-century in the game against Lancashire, and taking 4-55 against Warwickshire where he showed his ability to bowl a 'heavy' ball that accounted for England batsman Jonathan Trott.

Pictures: ADY KERRY

The county's coaching staff have been mindful of pushing him too far too soon, but there's no doubt Coles wants to be an all-rounder. It's hardly surprising; watching him in training, there's a child-like innocence where he wants to be involved in everything, whether it be batting, bowling or fielding, such his enthusiasm for the game.

While out in Australia, trying to curb that enthusiasm is something he hopes to achieve as he is aware of his growing importance to Kent's already depleted bowling attack.

"It's about getting ready for the English cricket season, and I know Perth aren't going to push me. I need to take things a bit slower as the last thing we need is for me to come back with an injury and miss parts of the season because that wouldn't be good for anyone. If I do get something that is sore I know I will not want to pull out of a game or training and watch, but I have to be sensible and ensure I am fit for Kent."

CLASS ACT: Medal hope Michael Gunning

Swimmers dive in for county title bid

A GROUP of top swimmers from Kent pit themselves against the best in Britain on Sunday as the national county team championships take place in Sheffield.

Competing in Division One, Kent's squad features swimmers from 12 different clubs as they battle to hold their own in an event traditionally dominated by the northern counties.

In Michael Gunning and Xander Alari-Williams, though, Kent possess two genuine class acts, while the girls' team contains several swimmers with experience on the big stage.

Gunning, featuring in the team alongside younger brother Luke, collected two medals at the national youth championships in August, while Alari-Williams is already a British breaststroke champion.

Kent swimming manager Jean Scott admitted the opposition would be fierce in Sheffield, but backed her swimmers to extend their stay in the top division.

"We've got a good squad but the word 'national' rings a few bells and it is a tough competition," she said. "Every team north of the Watford Gap will be strong – you look at the Great Britain team and a lot of them are from the north, training at Loughborough.

"A good return would be to keep our position in Division One, but we'd love to finish 10th or higher. It's hard because every county brings their top swimmers – I've even seen [Commonwealth gold medallist] Fran Halsall there."

The action gets under way at 11.50am with the 16/17-years girls 100-metre freestyle, running through 31 races and concluding with the mixed 6 x 50m freestyle team event.

KENT SQUAD: Rebecca Walton, Steffi King, Michael Gunning, Kunmi Ogunfeibo, Luke Gunning (Beckenham); Joan Sebastien Tello, Emma Mitchell, Leanne Hennessey (Greenwich Borough Mariners); Patrick Ham, Joseph Choong, Xander Alari-Williams (Sevenoaks); Kyriacos Papa-Adams, Louise Gates (Thanet); Charlotte Davies, Dan Seagrove-Castle (City of Canterbury); Sian Benmhamedi (Saxon Crown); Ashley Pattison (Black Lion); Katie Latham (Dover Lifeguard); Jamie Grain (Bexley); Megan Lee (Ashford Town); Elizabeth Hathaway (RTW Monson); Benedict Kelleher (Bromley).

FA gives Step 6 plans the green light

THE route to senior football is set to become significantly easier for ambitious Kent clubs, after the Football Association's League's Committee approved the formation of a new Step 6 competition in the county for next season.

The decision means that clubs in the Kent County League [KCL] with ambitions to move up to the Kent League will now get financial assistance and four years' grace to bring their facilities up to the required standard.

The chairman of the Kent League, Denise Richmond, has said clubs wishing to be a part of this new non-league pyramid next season should register their interest by October 31.

"We're delighted the FA Leagues Committee has given Step 6 in Kent the go-ahead," she said. "We would actively encourage all clubs who have an interest to find out more and register their interest.

"These are exciting times and we'd like to support interested clubs as much as possible."

Step 6 clubs will be given up to four years to bring their grounds up to the required 'G' standard, which must "give an overall impression of being suitable for the National League System."

STEP UP: Kent League chairman Denise Richmond awards Faversham the title

The move also opens up the possibility of relegation from the Kent League Premier Division.

The existing link between the leagues, dating back to 1992 when the KCL formed a Premier Division, has produced mixed results.

The main beneficiaries have been VCD Athletic, Sevenoaks Town, Holmesdale and Norton Sports, all of whom have won promotion and are now established senior sides.

However, Norton initially had to groundshare with Herne Bay, and other KCL champions like Bearsted, Snodland and Crockenhill, however have either been unable or unwilling to meet the Kent League's ground grading requirements.

Under the new system a club like Tunbridge Wells-based side Rusthall, would be allowed four seasons to make any improvements needed to Jockey Farm.

The existing set-up can also work against clubs who seek to provide senior football as a spectator sport – such as recently reformed Ashford Town.

Although Hythe Town and Faversham regained their former levels after a couple of seasons, when Maidstone United folded in 1992 their recovery was set back a number of years. A combination of politics and warring egos saw the reformed Maidstone Invicta placed in the KCL's bottom division – five full flights below Kent League level.

Despite restructuring, Canterbury City and Sheppey United, both of whom folded a decade ago, have similarly struggled to make their way through the KCL's lower divisions.

Brands owner plays down World Superbikes absence

By TOM HOWARD

IT'S been three years since Brands Hatch last hosted the World Superbike Championship (WSB), but circuit owner Jonathan Palmer insists it hasn't been missed.

The West Kingsdown circuit has enjoyed another good season in a sport that has been hit hard by the recession. Large crowds have continued to flock to the track, most notably for the British Superbike and Touring Car Championships, with a record 42,000 attending the latter's thrilling final last weekend.

In the past the WSB and Brands Hatch have gone hand in hand and it was one of the most anticipated meetings on the schedule.

Over the years the likes of multiple world champion Carl Fogarty and James Toseland competing in the championship would draw crowds in excess of 100,000, but that came to an end in 2007 with Palmer citing a crippling rise in fees as the reason he dropped the championship from the Brands Hatch calendar.

Picture: NICK DUNGAN

FULL HOUSE: A bumper crowd at Brands Hatch watched the thrilling finale of this year's British Touring Car Championship

However, the circuit has seen an increased response in spectator figures from the two rounds of the British Superbike Championship (BSB) it hosts every year and Palmer believes it has very nearly acted as a complete substitute for the WSB to justify his decision.

Palmer is predicting more success now the circuit will host three BSB meetings next year, with the opening round on April 25, a summer event on August 7 and the final round on October 9.

He said: "It has been a strong year. We've invested £600,000 to resurface the circuit and it is paying off.

"Obviously we haven't had the WSB this year again, but the BSB event we have in the summer is becoming a pretty good substitute. It's not quite the same, but not far off.

"We're working on something special for the final round of the BSB next season, it will be our biggest event. We have very strong national championships in BSB and BTCC and they bring in bigger crowds than some international events because there is more local awareness."

While he remains happy with the events his circuit hosts, Palmer has not completely ruled out a return of the world series to Kent.

He said: "We haven't thought about getting the WSB back, but if they come to me with a sensible offer, I will certainly listen. I don't want to go chasing after it though, we don't really need it as business is going well."

Despite the circuit experiencing a record BTCC crowd for the final round last Sunday won by Chevrolet's Jason Plato, Brands will host the opening round and penultimate meeting (October 2) of the championship next year instead.

Frustration for McPherson at World Equestrian Games

KENT showjumper David McPherson admitted his World Equestrian Games experience had been a "let-down" after finishing ninth with Great Britain in the team event.

McPherson retired his horse, Chamberlain Z, midway through the team final after knocking down two fences in the unfamiliar environment of jumping under floodlights.

The Maidstone-based rider finished 92nd in the overall standings and said the competition, held in Kentucky, had left him feeling rather underwhelmed.

"The venue was amazing, but it was a 1500-acre park and the walking distances were vast. It wasn't like anywhere I'd been to before and to be candid, it was a slight let-down.

"The lower quality people jumped well in the afternoon, surprisingly so. The evening class was under lights and it was difficult, not just for myself but there were some fabulous horses who didn't survive it. The less careful horses jumped very well, but the careful ones [like Chamberlain Z] froze up."

Picture: KIT HOUGHTON

RETIRED: David McPherson had to pull Chamberlain Z out at the event in Kentucky

McPherson, 50, now continues his long-term planning for the London Olympics in 2012, although he and Chamberlain Z are likely to take a step back from competition until early next year.

DEVASTATED: Tommy Hill

Picture: NICK DUNGAN

Hill loses title at the death

BECKENHAM rider Tommy Hill said he was "devastated," after a crash at Oulton Park last weekend cost him the British Superbike Championship.

Hill, who rides for the Worx Suzuki team, seemed to have one hand on the title after claiming second place in the first race of the season's final meeting, but he crashed out during the second race after colliding with James Ellison.

The 25-year-old bravely got back on a severely damaged bike, but he crashed out again two laps later and could only manage fifth in the third and final race, allowing the Japanese rider Ryuichi Kyonari, who won all three races on the day, to claim the title.

Hill, who slipped to third in the rankings behind runner-up Josh Brookes, was initially inconsolable having gone into the final meeting of the season with an 11-point series lead.

"I'm devastated, the team has put so much effort into this championship, and we wanted it so bad and it's just not happened," he said.

"It has been an incredible year, though. We started the season so well. The pressure then came on, but we responded and stayed at the front, so for it to go away in one race, well, we're all disappointed."

Timeline

KOS Media sport takes a look at the highlights of all the sporting action from the last 50 years

1960 50 YEARS AGO: GILLINGHAM'S attempts to sign Freddy Morris from Crewe Alexandra hit a snag with the winger reluctant to leave his base in Oswestry.

Morris asked to be able to train with a club nearer his home, an arrangement the Gills already offered to John Shepherd.

Meanwhile, Gills manager Harry Barratt took the precaution of banning himself from the dressing room ahead of a midweek game with Preston at Priestfield, having picked up a dose of the flu.

It was supposed to be the happiest day of his life, but when 20-year-old Frank Fordyke decided to get married during the football season, there was an unexpected drawback.

Fordyke tied the knot on the same day his team, Maidstone United, were due to play Corinthian Casuals in the Isthmian League, but his replacement on the right wing, Ted Saunders, played so well that Fordyke was unable to get back in the side and was forced to join Kingstonian.

1985 25 YEARS AGO: STEVE Brinkman was forced to retire from football at the age of 28, having suffered a heart attack after Maidstone United's Gola League game at Northwich Victoria.

Stones boss Barry Fry revealed Brinkman, who had already suffered one heart attack while playing for Barnet in 1982, was lucky to be alive, after failing to take his medication before the game.

"Steve usually takes his pills before a match, but on this occasion he didn't," Fry said. "On top of that he played with a cold, but he was determined to prove a point, that he could hold down a place in the side. It nearly cost him his life."

Brinkman was taken to hospital after complaining of chest pains on the coach.

"Steve must be fair to his wife and young children and call it a day," Fry said.

2000 10 YEARS AGO: KENT coach John Wright jetted off to India to discuss taking over the role of coaching the national side.

The hot favourite for the job, the Australian Geoff Marsh, had withdrawn his application after the Indian Cricket Board reportedly baulked at his salary demands, rumoured to be £300,000 per year, leaving Wright and Greg Chappell as the leading contenders to replace Kapil Dev, who stepped down in the wake of match-fixing allegations.

Kent's chief executive, Paul Millman, said: "We have been very supportive of John's case. We are reviewing all our options within the context of John's possible departure to India and also as part of a general end of season exercise."

The future of Canterbury City FC was thrown into doubt when chairman Tony Hiller-Carter quit.

FLYING THE FLAG: Martin Brockman won his first major championship medal

Brockman's brave heroic charge for decathlon bronze

DECATHLETE Martin Brockman produced one of the biggest surprises in Delhi with a gutsy display to pick up a bronze medal.

The multi-eventer was a surprise inclusion in England's squad for the Commonwealth Games in India, but he shone on his major championship debut with a potentially career-making performance in the decathlon.

The 22-year-old Medway & Maidstone athlete showed no sign of nerves as he set personal bests in each of the five events on the opening day of competition.

The highlight of the opening day saw him win the high jump event by clearing the bar at 7.29 metres. His impressive performance saw him hold second spot overnight going into the final day of competition.

Brockman set a another two personal bests on the final day, but his bronze medal chance came down to the 10th and last event, where he needed to finish 16 seconds in front of teammate Kevin Sempers in the 1500m. Despite the magnitude of the occasion, he stormed to victory in the event, finishing 20 seconds ahead of Sempers to secure his first major championship medal.

He said: "I could only have dreamed of achieving what I have done. I was just pleased to be selected for the team, but to win a medal is truly incredible.

"I don't know what to think, it hasn't sunk in yet. I pulled out seven personal bests and two season bests over two days, I couldn't have got anything more out of my body. What a great way to move forward."

Douglas 'runs her skin off' for relay gold

MONTELL Douglas ended a year plagued by injury with her greatest achievement in athletics by winning gold at the Commonwealth Games.

The 24-year-old sprinter was part of England's successful 4x100-metre relay quartet of Katherine Endacott, Laura Turner and Abi Oyepitan, who stormed to the gold medal on Tuesday.

The Blackheath & Bromley athlete ran an assured second leg in the relay as England destroyed the field to claim gold, finishing a second in front of Ghana with a time of 44.19 seconds.

Douglas, who grew up in Chatham, has spent the majority of the season recovering from a serious knee injury.

She was also part of the Great Britain relay quartet labelled a "disgrace" by performance director Charles Van Commenee after failing to qualify for the European Championships final in August, which makes her triumph in Delhi all the more sweeter.

She said: "I tried my best. Christine Bowmaker, our coach, has been fantastic and she gave us the biggest speech before we came out here. She told us to run our skins off and we did. I'm so happy, it's the best feeling in the world and it makes my 2010."

The British record holder failed to qualify for the final of the individual 100m.

DISAPPOINTED: Dan Caprice's chances of sevens medal were dashed by South Africa

Caprice so close as team is pipped for sevens medal

THERE was to be no fairytale ending for Dan Caprice in the rugby sevens, despite a series of sparkling performances from the Chatham-born winger in Delhi.

Having targeted a podium finish in his first Commonwealth Games, Caprice was left empty-handed after England saw a bronze medal snatched from their grasp by South Africa.

When he scored England's second try in Tuesday's play-off game, Caprice could almost feel the medal round his neck as the Springboks faced a 14-5 deficit with just over half the game remaining.

However, two tries in the last three minutes broke English hearts as South Africa triumphed 17-14 to leave the 20-year-old wondering what might have been.

Caprice, a former Sevenoaks schoolboy, will take plenty of positives away from the Games, however, after running in five tries during England's six games in India.

His highlight will be the final pool game against Australia, when he touched down twice – including a superb solo effort – to ensure England progressed as group winners.

Caprice also scored in the opening game against Sri Lanka and he went over against reigning champions New Zealand in the semi-final, although England were well-beaten, 33-12, by the eventual gold medallists.

Having spent last season with Blackheath, Caprice is now full-time with the England Sevens squad and his attentions will turn to the new IRB Sevens World Series, which kicks-off in Dubai on December 3.

ROUND-UP

THERE was widespread success for Kent's contingent of competitors at the Commonwealth Games, with medals won right across the sports.

Canterbury's Natalie Seymour travelled to India with designs on gold in the women's hockey, but those dreams were shattered after a heartbreaking defeat to Australia in the semi-finals.

Seymour and England saw off South Africa 1-0 to claim bronze, however, but there was no happy ending for Ashley Jackson and the men's team after two penalty shoot-out defeats.

The Chatham-born midfielder scored twice as England held India 3-3 in the semi-finals, but the hosts held their nerves to win on penalty flicks. Jackson's medal hopes evaporated as England lost to New Zealand, again on penalties, in the bronze-medal match.

HEARTBREAK: Natalie Seymour (left) won bronze with England but Ashley Jackson missed out as the men's side lost a penalty shootout

There was a track medal for Ashford-born Nick Leavey, who won bronze with England in the men's 4x400m final as Australia and Kenya took gold and silver respectively.

Non-league clubs eye plum Cup ties

Four Kent sides 90 minutes away from facing league giants in first-round proper

By TOM HOWARD

FOUR of the county's non-league sides are just 90 minutes away from a potential meeting with Football League giants Southampton and Sheffield Wednesday in the FA Cup first round.

Dartford, Dover Athletic, Ebbsfleet United and Hythe Town are all just a game away from progression to the first round and are all hoping to be this year's giant-killers.

The FA Cup is renowned for its upsets involving non-league sides down the years, and Kent League side Hythe Town are keeping up the tradition with their impressive run to the fourth qualifying round.

Scott Porter's side are on the verge of making history with a possible maiden appearance in the first round, after keeping their cup dreams alive with a 1-0 win at Ryman Premier League Concord Rangers last Saturday. However, they will need to dig deep to overcome Conference South side Staines Town to progress, but the Hythe boss is already dreaming of a trip to St Mary's.

Porter said: "These days don't come around often and we go into every game wanting to win it and we'll be looking to create another shock. We're just enjoying every single minute of it whoever we've got next, and it's a great bit of history if we do it because we could be playing Southampton if we get through."

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS: Dartford (in white) and Hythe (far right) are a win away from a big FA Cup tie

It's been 21 years since Dartford last made their appearance in the FA Cup first round, so it's no wonder the club's supporters are daring to dream this season.

The Conference South side will travel to Ridgeons Premier club, Leiston, after a titanic 9-8 win on penalties in Tuesday night's replay against Canvey Island.

Darts boss Tony Burman said: "It is games in this competition that players and supporters love. The fans love it because of the publicity and the financial rewards for the club are great."

Dover Athletic have endured a miserable record in the competition with only two first round ties in the last 28 seasons. The Whites have come close on many occasions, but this year they have a good chance with a trip to Farnborough.

Ebbsfleet United are one of the county's most successful sides in the competition, with four first round ties in the last 10 years. They will aim to make that five when fellow Conference South side Boreham Wood visit Stonebridge Road.

All four cup ties take place next Saturday.

Stones return is only on if ground is scaled down

MAIDSTONE United's new chief executive, Bill Williams, says a return to the county town by the club's stated target of 2011 is a realistic proposition – but only if existing stadium plans are scaled down.

Eyebrows were raised when the new board said they planned to bring the club home by the end of next year, but Williams said: "Hopefully we'll have quite a dynamic plan. It (the planned stadium at James Whatman Way) is not going to be massive, but it will be practical.

"If Maidstone's got a population of 160,000 for argument's sake, I think we'll get crowds of 800 to 1,000 if there's a reasonable team on the field. Obviously we'll get more if we have a cup run, so we need to build a basic shell for 2,500 to 3,000, with the room to go up if we need to."

Williams, part of a trio of directors alongside the new owners Terry Casey and Oliver Ash, says there has been a positive reaction to the takeover among supporters and potential sponsors.

"We haven't asked hundreds and thousands of people, but we got an excellent reaction on Saturday (the new board's first game against Aveley) which I think was down to a bit of relief to be honest," he said.

"People were thinking 'thank God this is over'. We've also had a good response from the council, with three or four people saying if there's anything that needs doing they'll help, and three or four businesses."

But he warned the new board will need to stabilise the club and sort out the red tape before it can reveal more detailed plans.

"When you take over any business you've got to go through a process," he said. "Once you've signed the deal you've got to sort out your office, telephone lines, set up bank accounts and change all the old information.

"It takes seven to 10 days and it's quite boring to be honest. In terms of payments to different people, that's another seven to 10 days again and at the point we'll have stabilised it and hopefully we'll be able to move forward."

Home-grown talent comes good for Fleet at right time

THE Stonebridge Road revolving door spun again this summer, but two home-grown talents are well on their way to becoming permanent fixtures in the Ebbsfleet United side.

Midfielders Michael West and Tom Phipp are quickly becoming stars of the Fleet's Conference South promotion push, having both progressed through the club's youth set-up and worked their way into manager Liam Daish's first-team plans.

At 19, West was one of one of only five players to remain with the Fleet beyond the end of last season, while Phipp, 17, signed senior forms in July, three months after lifting the FA County Youth Cup with Kent.

Assistant manager Paul McCarthy saw both players develop through the club's PASE programme and admitted the break-up of Daish's squad in the summer had broadened the horizon for both players this season.

"Yes, no doubt about it," he said. "The budget had been cut and there's only so many experienced players you can get in, but Tom was always in our plans to get a contract anyway and he's proved us right. We knew what he was capable of, but it's a challenge when you're used to playing youth team games for so long, to start playing against men is tough.

"Last season Westy was in and out a lot, but he's really stepped up and he's shown he's more than capable of performing. All being well, we'd like to see them develop and go even further up the leagues."

Both players have already weighed in with vital goals this season, with West bagging a late winner at Farnborough, while Phipp's strike at leaders Bromley earned the Fleet a well-deserved point.

While McCarthy believes they have a huge part still to play in Ebbsfleet's season, his real hope is to use the duo's example to entice the next crop of young talent to the club.

"Hopefully we can use it as a way of attracting some better young players," he said. "Five or six years ago, we were one of the only clubs doing it [PASE] but now there's a lot of competition locally. However, we've shown that if you're good enough, you will get your chance."

BENN FIGHTS CANCER

Golfer vows to return to Tour after having kidney removed

EXCLUSIVE

By TOM HOWARD

KENT golfer Benn Barham insists he will fight back and make a European Tour return after a cancer scare forced him to have his kidney removed.

The popular county professional had his right kidney taken out in an operation at the Kent and Canterbury Hospital on Tuesday after it was found to have a potentially cancerous tumour.

The 34-year-old, who lives in Tenterden, was only aware of the tumour after he went for an ultrasound scan following stomach problems suffered while playing on the European Challenge Tour earlier this season.

The scan showed no signs of stomach abnormalities, but did highlight a tumour on his kidney, which doctors recommended be removed.

Barham, who lost his permanent place on the European Tour last season, is awaiting results of the operation, but expects to make a full recovery. The two-time Challenge Tour winner says he has been overwhelmed by the messages of support received.

Speaking from his hospital bed, he said: "I have had the operation and now I've only got the one kidney. I feel pretty groggy but that is expected after a major operation, and now I have just got to wait for the results in a couple of weeks.

"It is a weight off my mind knowing that I have had the operation, but now I've just got to wait for the results and see what plan of action I will have to take next."

The procedure and ensuing recovery has cut short his golf season and ended his chances of competing in November's Tour Qualifying School for a full 2011 European Tour card.

Emotional

The Chart Hills Golf Club member was in competitive action right up until last weekend when he played in the Alfred Dunhill Links Championship, alongside Ryder Cup winners Lee Westwood, Martin Kaymer and Colin Montgomerie.

Barham finished tied 83rd after missing the cut at the prestigious St Andrews Old Course, but said knowing it would be his last tournament for a while, playing the final hole was an emotional experience.

"The Alfred Dunhilll Links was good, but when I was coming down the last hole knowing I had missed the cut it was a bit emotional because I knew this would be my last tournament for a bit," he said.

BIGGEST FIGHT: Benn Barham had a kidney removed on Tuesday after scan revealed potentially cancerous tumour

It's too early to put a date on a return to professional golf, but Barham insists his career is not over and he wants to make a comeback on the European Tour.

He said: "The Challenge Tour schedule hasn't come out yet, but it will probably start around January February time.

"It will most likely take two months to recover fully from the operation and then I will have to get back into the swing of playing and get back to being match fit. I definitely want to return to the Tour once I fully recover though."

The father of one is a committed supporter of Demelza House Children's Hospice, near Sittingbourne, and says he plans to continue his charity work while he recovers.

Scouts keep an eye on Gills ace

POTENTIAL: Andy Hessenthaler (inset) says Jack Payne is one to watch

GILLINGHAM midfielder Jack Payne looks set for a bright future after manager Andy Hessenthaler revealed the teenager is being watched by a number of other clubs, writes Glenn Pearson.

The 18-year-old has been one of the stand-out players for the Gills so far this term, so much so that scouts have been keeping tabs on his progress in League Two.

Payne signed a three-year deal at Gillingham in October last year and would command a fee if he was to move on, but Hessenthaler is confident his midfield maestro will be staying put.

"With Jack Payne, we've got more and more scouts turning up week in, week out watching him and that's good for him and the club," he said. "He's got a long-term deal, he loves it here and he's a local boy. I think he's loving his football at the moment and it's important he keeps getting more and more games under his belt.

"He's a Matt Jarvis for me, we gave him his chance in the lower divisions and now look at him, he's playing in the Premier League and doing really well. For me, Jack Payne's in that mould, without a doubt."

Another player impressing the Gills boss is striker Cody McDonald.

The Norwich loanee missed yesterday's game at Port Vale with a calf strain, as did Adebayo Akinfenwa (groin), but they are both expected to be fit for Saturday's visit of Torquay. "I've been pleased with Cody, he's a pleasure to work with," Hessenthaler said.

"It would be nice to have him settled – sometimes when the goals start flying in, you get a partnership and perhaps he's getting that with big Bayo.

"Unfortunately they've both been disrupted and we need to get that settled."
